Port Hope Tragedy Father Commits Suicide in Cell

Edward Tate, who was in custody at Port Hope, on a charge of killing his young daughter, with an axe, while she was asleep in bed, committed suicide on Saturday by hanging himself in his cell.

Worrying over his terrible deed of last Monday and also the fact that in his own town he had this morning to answer to a charge of murder, Tate committed suicide during the night by hanging. When the gaoler visited Tate's cell this morning at ten minutes past six o'clock, he found Tate's lifeless body suspended from the ceiling by two strips of the sheet. Tate, during the night had torn up the sheet and placed strips of it through two air holes in the ceiling of the cell. He then fastened it securely about his neck and jumped from the bed. When found he was from six to eight inches from the floor, and the Doctor stated that he had been dead probably four hours.

One of the prisoners was placed on guard last night and he stated that he visited Tate's cell twice and on both occasions Tate was sleeping. Mr. Ferguson, of the Counties' Jail informed the Guide this morning that he had Tate out in the garden last evening with the rest of the prisoners and he chatted and laughed more than on any other occasion. When he was first confined to jail he frequently remarked that he ought to be dead and for this reason a guard was placed over him. Evidently the guard went to sleep, as the doctors said that Tate must have been dead fully four hours.

Dr. Ferris will open an inquest this afternoon and the remains will be taken to Port Hope this evening. Thus ends a sad tragedy and one of the most sensational to ever happen in Port Hope.

The Chronicle says the Russians have not been defeated or anything like it, and they are inflicting fearful losses on the Germans.

ONLY TEN PATS LEFT FROM TORONTO'S QUOTA

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—Of the 213 Toronto men in the Princess Patricias, the first Canadian regiment to get to the fighting line, only ten are still on the effective list. Pte. R. Smith a member of No. 1 Company (all Toronto men) of the regiment, who has returned to his home at 62 De Grassi street after being wounded, gave out the figures. He was wounded in the back by shrapnel on May 4 in the trenches at Ypres. He was taken to a hospital in England and granted his discharge at Shorncliffe, where he had also received his discharge from the Royal Sussex Regiment thirteen years ago.

Pte. Smith had a little complaint about the wording of his discharge. It merely states that he was discharged on account of medical unfitness. "People seeing my papers would never know that I had been wounded and rendered incapable," he stated.

Kingston Widow Brutally Murdered

Young Man, Hiding in the House, Accused of the Ghastly Crime

KINGSTON, Ont., July 31.—Entering the home of Mrs. Nancy Job, 225 Wellington street, between 12 and 1 o'clock this morning in response to a report that a man had broken into the house, Constable Thomas Mullinger found Mrs. Job in a dying condition as the result of a brutal assault. She died a few minutes later. Crouching behind a table in the house Mullinger saw Alfred E. Suddard and immediately placed him under arrest.

Mrs. Job's body was terribly mutilated, both her eyes blackened and her face covered with bruises. There was also a number of stab wounds in her face and neck. The murdered woman was 80 years of age.

Suddard was taken to the police station, where a charge of murder was laid against him by P. C. Mullinger. In his pockets when he was searched, were found a dollar and a knife, the latter badly stained with blood. He says he remembers nothing between the time that he left a local hotel and when he was arrested and taken to the station.

Cries of "My God! O, My God!" were heard by Mrs. Derry, who lives in the rooms across the hall occupied by Mrs. Job. Mrs. Derry sent her little girl to the police station but on her way there she met a soldier who told P. C. Mullinger. He hurried to the house and after summoning an ambulance and doctors took Suddards to the police station. The old lady lived but fifteen minutes after being discovered, during which time she was unconscious and made no statement regarding the attack made upon her.

Suddards in Police Court

Suddards appeared in Police Court this morning charged with the murder. He is being defended by Mr. D. A. Givens. The magistrate said that a preliminary hearing would be given the accused after the inquest had taken place and remanded him for a week.

Several witnesses will be called at the inquest, among whom are the people living in the house, P. C. Mullinger, the soldier who notified him and the doctors.

WILD STREET RIOT OVER LACROSSE GAME

Disgraceful Fight in Toronto in Which Hundreds Take Part

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—That certain members of the city police force so far forgot themselves as to attack peaceful onlookers, is the serious allegation made by many citizens concerning an ugly riot on Cottingham street Saturday afternoon. The charges will probably be investigated by the Police Commissioners.

Laxity on the part of the police in attempting control of the budding trouble by preventing the players of one lacrosse team from brutally treating their opponents was, according to the stories of witnesses of the ensuing events, the cause of the riot. Witnesses state that when matters came to a head it required the combined efforts of a mounted constable and twelve members of the uniformed and plainclothes departments to clear the streets Over a thousand persons took part in the melee, in which the innocent bystanders and peacemaking citizens were treated with scant consideration, receiving blows from the batons of the seemingly infuriated officers which rendered them, in some cases, semi-conscious. That a youth, William J. Simpson, 47 Grant street, whose only offence is stated to be that he remonstrated when a friend was knocked unconscious during the game, and who had never before been in police hands, should be so treated that he was driven to fight to save himself from assault, is, acording to the stories told, deserving of investigation. Simpson is charged with disorderly conduct and with assaulting the police. He is a recent recruit to the Governor-General's Body Guard.

BRUTAL LACROSSE STRUGGLE

According to witnesses of the lacrosse game which was being played between members of the Riverdale and Maitland Clubs no action was taken by the police constables to check the brutal efforts of certain players who struck down their opponents with their sticks four times. One victim remained in an unconscious conditon for ten minutes, while a second player fell three times under the blows of his opponent.

During the closing stages of the game, while one of the players was unconscious, Simpson entered into a verbal dispute with other bystanders. Constable Croft, it is claimed, asked him to move on and then followed up his order with a punch in the face. The failure to obey on the instant resulted in a similar effort on the part of the police constable. Angered, Simpson was on the point of retaliating and may have done so when his friends counseled him to go quietly with Croft and another constable, who joined in the party. Simpson was willing, but replied that the officers were choking him. Treatment was such that Simpson was forced to break away from the officers, who started after him. A fight commenced, in which Simpson bowled the two constables about like ninepins.

BATTLE WITH POLICE.

Eventually Simpson was handcuffed by the police. While on the ground it is claimed that the constables did not hesitate in driving his head to the pavement and otherwise using rough and ready methods. Simpson again broke away from his captors and smashed the handcuffs on a curbstone. Joined by two plainclothesmen, the constables started into the battle again.

The people of the vicinity were apparently aroused. Women stood on their doorsteps, alternately denouncing the police for their methods and cheering the shirtless and bruised Simpson. A grey-bearded gentleman stepped into the ring and asked the police to give Simpson "British fairplay." A gruff reply was the only answer to the gentleman.

PITCHED BATTLE RAGED.

Bricks were flying through the air, bystanders were falling under the blows of police clubs, and the affair assumed such a serious aspect that police whistles were requisitioned to bring reserves into the vicinity. Eventually a mounted constable and other officers cleared the street, and Simpson was thrust, bleeding and bruised, into a waiting patrol waggon.

During the fight Constable Croft received an ugly gash from the handcuffs of the prisoner, while a second officer, it is charged, was kicked in the stomach by Simpson. This is the cause of the second charge.

TWO MORE ARRESTS.

Later William Brown, 82 Birch avenue, and Charles Sanders, 32 Birch avenue, were taken into custody. While the youths are charged with obstructing the police, the only offence, from the incomplete stories of witnesses, seems to be the making of remarks during the struggle toward Yonge Street with the prisoner, and the fact that they were members of the mob. A feature of the case is that Inspector Dilworth of the No. 5 Police Station, was present during the assaults committed by players during the [illegible] the game and that he was overheard to remark that he intended to visit Parks Commissioner Chambers to prevent, if possible, the issuance of permits to certain clubs in the future.

MOTHER THROWS HER YOUNG CHILD INTO BAY

Attempted Murder This Morning at Trenton—"Here I Go, Too," Said the Distracted Woman, But She Did Not

At about eight o'clock this morning, Mrs. Lena Banfield of Trenton, attempted to murder her five-year-old child.

Mr. Morton Dafoe was on the bridge leading to the business section of the town, when he heard a splash by the dock. He thought it was a dog fallen in the water, but he hurried around and on the way passed Mrs. Banfield, who said "Here I go, too," but she did not. The young man saw the little girl struggling in the water, and without a moment's hesitation plunged in, and succeeded in bringing her safely to the dock.

The woman gave poverty and trouble as her excuse for the act. She was taken before Magistrate O'Rourke, who committed her for trial.

The little girl, Mary, was committed to the care of the Children's Aid Society, and Mr. W. H. Wrightmeyer, local agent, brought the child to the Belleville Shelter. Five years ago Mrs. Banfield's children, three in number, were put under the protection of the Children's Aid Society, owing to immoral conditions.

The child in question, is illegitimate. The whereabouts of the father is unknown, he having separated from the family some eight years ago.

SHEOL; HADES; HELL; GRAVE

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Geo. Perry, through The Intelligencer, says that Sheol never means the grave, but "always means the place of departed spirits." If you will grant me space in your valuable journal I think I can show your readers conclusively that Mr. Perry has a few things yet to learn about the Bible use of this word. According to Young's Analytical Concordance the word Sheol is translated grave 31 times in the common version of the scriptures. If the word never means grave, why did the translators of the King James version give 'grave' as the English equivalent in those 31 places?

Now let us see if the translators were ever warranted in so translating this word. Jacob said, "If mischief befall him (my son) by the way . . . then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave (Sheol). Do departed spirits of the aged take their gray hairs with them to the place of departed Spirits? If Mr. Perry is correct about Sheol, they do. See Gen. 42:38; 44:29,31. Man has power to bring down the hoar head of man to Sheol with blood. Do departed spirits ever have hoary heads with blood? I Kings 2:6,9. "Like sheep they are laid in Sheol"—Psalm 49:14. What! Mr. Perry, do you mean to teach that departed spirits are laid in Sheol like sheep? Nonsense! Dead bodies are sometimes.

As these passages, to my mind, are emphatically out of harmony with Mr. Perry's teaching, I shall now try to throw some light on them by bringing a few other portion of scripture to bear on them. At the time of the judgment Hades is to give up the dead which are in it. Rev. 20:13. Hades, which is translated grave here, is the representative of Sheol in the Old Testament. This can be demonstrated if any one doubts it. Then it is plain that instead of Sheol or Hades "always" meaning the place of departed spirits it is used for literally dead people. Accordingly we read of the "uncircumcised which are gone down to Sheol with their weapons of war and they have laid their swords under their heads." Ezek. 32:27. Do departed spirits take their weapons of war with them and rest their heads on their swords in Sheol? Let us hear from you, Mr. Perry, in reference to this "In death there is no remembrance of thee (God) in Sheol: who shall give thee thanks." Psalm 6:5.

Sheol, then, is a place or condition in which thanks cannot be given to God and those dead cannot even remember God. This, again, is pointedly opposed to Mr. Perry's theology. "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything." "Also their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished."—Eccl. 9:5, 6. How do we account for this—love, hatred and envy all perished in the death state? We have been taught differently. Verse 10 explains:—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in Sheol, the grave, whither thou goest." It is evidently quite true that all go to Sheol, but we do not read of any departed spirits going there, as stated by Mr. Perry. Neither do we read of departed spirits anywhere in the Bible. But, on the contrary, notwithstanding the fact that all go unto one place, all are of the dust and all turn to dust again. Eccl. 3:20. It is also quite true, as Mr. Perry says, that Sheol is spoken of as being downwards but the dead go down to a condition of "silence." Psalm 115:17. It is quite evident that Sheol means the grave in these passages at least.

But what about a future life, say you? Well this is why the resurrection becomes necessary. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5:28,29. All live to God. He does not and will not forget them. Though literally dead they are alive to Him. The force of Christ's argument with the Saducees in favor of a resurrection lay in the fact that God had said, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." And as He is not the God of dead people these old patriarchs must live again. Therefore, this proved to the mind of Jesus that there must of necessity be a resurrection of the dead. But, if these old fathers of the faithful were literally alive in any sense (as Mr. Perry would have it), Christ's argument would have no force whatever to prove a resurrection. The other passages Mr. Perry quotes can all be harmonised with the views set forth herein.

I shall now close by quoting a portion of Acts 2, from a very recent translation by James McFat, Professor of New Testament Greek and Exegesis, Mansfield College, Oxford. "Death could not hold him (Jesus). For David says of him, "I saw the Lord before me evermore; lest I be shaken he is at my right hand. My heart is glad, my tongue exults, my very flesh will rest in hope, because thou wilt not forsake my soul (me) in the grave, nor let thy holy one suffer decay. Thou hast made to me the paths of life, thou wilt fill me with delight in thy presence." Peter commenting on the above says, "He (David) was a prophet; he knew God had sworn an oath to him that He would seat one of his descendants on His throne; so He spoke with a prevision of the resurrection of the Christ, when he said that he was not forsaken in the grave nor did his flesh suffer decay. This Jesus God raised as we can all bear witness." Now the question arises, did this translator understand his business when he rendered Hades grave twice above. I believe all Greek scholars will endorse his rendering, and consequently Mr. Perry's deductions from this passage are fallacious.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

It is stated in camp that 500 recruits have already been secured for the 77th Battalion, and that the number is being increased daily.

The only guests at the dinner given by Col. Hemming to the Duke of Connaught, outside the staff members of the headquarters mess, were Lt.-Col. Dawson and Lt.-Col. Edwards.

Major McNeil, junior Major of the 38th Battalion, is in command of the battalion in the absence of Lt Col. Edwards and Major Ferguson. Most of the officers of the 38th are on leave and are expected to-morrow.

The machine gun adopted by the Canadian militia is the Colt gun, made in Hartford, Conn., and costs completely equipped, $1,000. The British War Office is using the Maxim, the Vickers-Maxim, the Hotchkiss and recently, the Lewis gun. The Maxim is the favorite because of its strength, its ability to sustain continued fire and the perfect control of its mechanism. The Colt is an air cooled machine. It is almost impossible to secure a machine gun of any kind, as the British government has control of every make for the next two years. The Canadian machine guns which have been donated will be supplied through the Imperial War Office. Citizens who are interested in the machine gun should visit the camp and see it in operation at the machine gun school on instruction.

Drowning Accident At Presqu' Ile

On Saturday afternoon a drowning accident occurred at Presque Isle, the victim being Mr. James Ward of Toronto.

It appears that the victim of the drowning accident came down to Presque Isle to spend the week end with members of his family who were camping there. In the afternoon Mr. Ward went for a swim and from some cause sank to rise no more. His body was recovered some time after, but all efforts to bring back life proved unavailing. The body was subsequently shipped to Toronto to be prepared for burial.

GOOD CATCHERS.

They Must Be Quick Thinkers and Are Hard to Develop.

Good fielders and hard hitters there are who are not quick witted, but never a catcher, who is the first to see signs of weakness in the pitcher and sends word to the bench for another pitcher to warm up. Three years' experience with a major league is regarded as necessary to make a catcher competent. Only a few continue long enough to have such experience.

Good catchers say that when they hear the ball touch the bat their hands instantly fly toward the ball, no matter where it glances off the bat. Some after losing sight of a fly in the sun have the ability to reach it nevertheless.

Some catchers are unjustly blamed for not putting a runner out who gets a big lead off the pitcher, who is really at fault. Here not only a good throw will fail, but it is often useless to throw at all.

Good catchers make many unexpected throws. They must throw from an unnatural position and with a jerky motion of the arm. Archer threw with a snap of the arm while standing flat footed and put many out on first base.

The catcher signals second baseman that he is going to throw the next pitched ball to him; the pitcher delivers it a little to one side so that it can be handled easily; the shortstop knows the next ball will not be hit and so can back up second base. This unexpected throw often puts the runner out on second.

A similar play is when the runners move up every time the ball is pitched. If those on second and third both get well off the bags the catcher again signals the pitcher to waste a ball and makes as if he were going to throw to third, but instead throws quickly to second and retires the runner there, or makes as if he were going to throw to second, but instead throws just beyond the pitcher, when the baseman starts for second, and he, without stopping, runs up, catches the ball and sends it home to retire the man seeking to score.—Arthur Macdonald in American Education Review.

EVOLUTION OF THE CHAIR.

Benches Without Backs Served For Seats In the Middle Ages.

It seems odd to contemplate that, with the multitude of chairs to be found in every home these days, once upon a time there were no chairs as we know them in any home. In those days benches answered the purpose now served by chairs, and when a family drew up to the table for its meals in the middle ages they sat on long benches, which had no support for the backs, instead of chairs.

From long ago there were heavy thrones on which the rulers sat, but these throne chairs were so heavy that they could not be easily moved. Later the benches were given a back, and still later the chairs as we know them today were evolved.

It was not until 1600, in the time of Charles I., that the average Englishman knew of chairs or had them in his house, according to those who have made a study of furniture. The first English chairs were imported from France, and the native cabinetmakers and carpenters made chairs in imitation of these.

In those days the fashion in chairs changed with the fashion of clothes. When full skirts were the style the chairs became wider, so that milady and her skirts could be accommodated on one chair. The difference in the size of chairs that we have today, made in imitation of old styles, comes from this difference in clothes.—London Standard.

Why a Whip "Cracks."

In a lecture on "Mechanics in the Home" delivered to boys at the Royal Institution, in London, Professor C. V. Boys tried to explain why a whip cracks. The Scientific American remarks that his explanation was only tentative, and the greatest authorities on dynamics have been at a loss to give the reason. Briefly, it has to do with the fact that, owing to the action of centrifugal and other forces, the speed at which the whip travels through the air is greater and greater throughout the length of its lash and so great at the end that it comes up to the velocity of sound.

Mimicking Death.

Sarah Bernhardt's fondness for playing death scenes (you remember her habit of sleeping in a coffin) made her an object of terror to the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid. When the great actress visited Constantinople years ago Abdul refused absolutely to see her or witness her playing, declaring that he had no wish to come in contact with a woman who could mimic death to such perfection.—London Chronicle.

Letters From Belleville Boys At The Front

CORP. GEO. LANDCASTER

In a letter to his mother, Mrs. Lancaster, 95 Station St. Belleville, Corp. Geo. Lancaster describes the funeral of a comrade, the ceremony being performed by his father father, Rev. Capt. Pringle (chaplain).

July 6th, 1915

Dear mother.—Just a line to let you know that we, that is (Fred and I) are in the best of health at present and enjoying a rest after a good spell in the trenches. Our whole division went into action nearly a fortnight ago and I don't think we have suffered very heavily. I lost one good man out of my section; he was hit with shrapnel and killed outright. "Old Mac" as we used to call him, had a very nice burial. The sergeant of our platoon telephoned for his father, who is chaplain to one of the Canadian Battalions and he conducted the burial service under extraordinary circumstances. The rough coffin was carried to the graveside and lowered into the grave by the N.C.O's of the Platoon, after which a portion of Scripture was read, followed by a prayer and burial service by the chaplain (Capt. Pringle). While this solemn service was being performed, before the majority of the deceased's comrades, the Germans were sniping at us and were sending all kinds of shells over us. (The grave by the way was dug out in a pretty open field,

I met our Willie about a fortnight ago; he looks fine. He told me that he had been hit on the shoulder with a piece of shrapnel, but it did not hurt him. I don't know whether he has written home since then. According to the papers the Kaiser says the war will be over by October. Well, I would not like to disappoint him, but I hope the war is over before that. There is some talk of us getting three or four days leave in England. I hope that is true, because I am sure we can do with it.

I was very much surprised when you told me that James had joined the army. I think two of us in this affair is quite sufficient. This is no picnic—it is simply Hell let loose.

Well, how is everyone at home. I hope all are alright and in the best of health. There are some fine crops in France. There is no danger of us starving here; there are tons of potatoes and other vegetables, besides every kind of fruit you can mention. Well, I think this is all for the present Please remember me to everyone. I remain. Your loving son,

GEORGE.

IN and ABOUT THE CITY

ALLEGED FAMILY QUARREL

The police on Saturday night answered a call to a residence in the city where it was alleged a man was abusing his wife All was quiet when the officer arirved upon the scene, and in consequence no arrest was made.

ALLEGED THEFT

It was reported to the police that a buggy had been taken out of a barn at Rossmore, the property of Charles Lossee. The affair was investigated, but it was ascertained that there was no theft, but simply a case of taking the property without the owner knowing the circumstances.

CHINAMAN UPSET

A Chinese canoing yesterday afternoon in the bay about five o'clock, upset his canoe when about eight or ten yards from the bank, near the cannon in Victoria Park. He clung to the canoe until a motor launch came to his rescue and took him on board. The boat was named The Dash and came from another town. The Chinaman, beyond being frightened, was none the worse for his ducking.

GUILTY OF VAGRANCY

Before Magistrate Masson this morning Violet Wilson was convicted of the charge of vagrancy. The accused was, however, allowed her liberty upon furnishing a bond of $100 for her good behavior. Mr. Anderson for prosecution and Mr. E. J. Butler for the accused.

WINDOWS MUTILATED

Some time during Saturday or Sunday nights, some windows of business places on Front street were mutilated. At one place a letter of the owner's name was removed and in another case the plate glass was scratched, evidently by a diamond or some other gem which had the effect of leaving its marks. At another business place, the name of the owner which was upon the window was mutilated. This is a case of vandalism which calls forth on the part of our police vigorous investigation and punishment for the offenders. This is by no means the first time in this city that such vandalism has been practised and it is about time that it should be stopped.

Belleville Club of Winnipeg Picnic

Greatest Outing in the History of the Club, at Kildonan Park

WINNIPEG, July 26.—The great day has come and gone and the members of the Belleville Club and their families have settled down for another year of a hum drum existence after the greatest picnic in the history of the Club. It was the real old fashioned kind of a Basket Picnic, the like of which brought back many memories of Massassaga, Twelve O'Clock Point, Glen Island, etc., when little Willie was up before breakfast and by eight o'clock was wandering on his way down Front Street loaded with the basket of eats on his way to the "Picnic," which next to Circus Day was the biggest event of the year in Belleville for the youngsters. Energetic work on the part of the Committee headed by Bert Wallace and assisted by Deb. Snider, Will Lennox, Walter Dobbs, Ed. Coulson and others was responsible for the enjoyment of nearly 200 former "Bellevillians." Fully that number took advantage of the beautiful day for an outing.

Fun there was galore, those who sat around in the quiet shade amused themselves by watching the various amusements which always take place on occasions like this. The babies for once were allowed to prattle with glee and the boys romped around playing ball and making themselves an accepted nuisance while the girls ate Ice Cream cones and chewed gum while their elders chatted and so the day went—something doing every minute. Nothing that could add to the day's pleasure was omitted, the committee arranged cups and saucers and dishes, hot and cold water, milk, tea, ice cream, ice cream cones to the kiddies, etc. Among those present were:—

SERVICE'S START.

Grubbing Bank Clerk Wrote Verses For the Fun of It.

Here are some interesting stories of Robert W. Service, the Canadian poet, whose "Songs of a Sourdough," have made him famous the world over, and who is "doing his bit" for the Empire as a motor driver in France these troublous days:

"At twenty-one, to the horror of my parents, I kicked over the traces and precipitated myself violently into the wild West." That is how Mr. Service himself relates his migration to Canada, which occurred after he had spent some years as clerk in a bank in Glasgow. "Having reached years of discretion," he says, "the routine of the office began to pall upon me. I seemed to see my life an endless vista of drab days, and myself growing bald and paunchy in a halo of respectability. I rebelled. I wanted color, action, change, excitement, with the thrill of not knowing what was round the corner."

And Mr. Service got it; for, after traveling steerage as an emigrant, he landed in Vancouver with exactly $5 in his pocket, and had to start work by picking stones off the surface of a field destined for turnips. Tree-chopping, farming, school teaching, newspaper reporting, Indian trading, and various other miscellaneous occupations followed before the Kipling of Canada came to the conclusion that his parents were right, and that the work of a bank clerk was his forte.

"I was tired," he says, "of being kicked about from pillar to post, and once more I sought a situation in a bank. I was tamed down, and then I had a stroke of luck that changed my whole destiny. For at the height of the gold rush I was sent to the Yukon by the bank which employed me, and remained there for eight years. The extraordinary virility and color of the life made a great impression on me, and it was during the solitary walks I used to take as a cure for dyspepsia that I first began to write.

"I had read so many stories of the north, and I had read so much Kipling, that I began, out of sheer boredom, to versify, Kipling fashion."

Mr. Service, however, thought so little of his work at that time that the verses which emanated from his pen were thrown into the bottom of his trunk, and lay there for some time. One lucky day, however, he came across them and read them to a friend. This friend thought "they weren't so bad for an amateur," and suggested that Mr. Service should have some of them printed and hand them round to his friends as a Christmas card.

"This, however, struck me as rather foolish," he says, "and happening to receive a bonus of one hundred dollars, I took the plunge, sent my verses to a publisher, and told him to go ahead and print them at my expense."

The rest, according to Mr. Service, reads like a fairy story, for the publisher was so impressed with the merit of the verses that he insisted on publishing them on a royalty basis, and before Mr. Service realized what a genius he was his verses had reached the seventh edition, and they have been selling ever since.

"So it came about," he says, in his whimsical fashion, "that a grubbing bank clerk rubbed his eyes, stared unbelievingly at checks of four figures where before he had stared with equal disbelief at bills representing his debts, and wondered at the absurd turn of events.

"That," he concludes, in his concise autobiography, "is how I became a professional scribe, and ultimately drifted to Paris, where I grew long hair, developed a far-away look, and sighed for fresh worlds to conquer."

A Horse of Another Color.

A young Toronto reporter, engaged in the unpleasant task of visiting the relatives of soldiers whose names had appeared in the casualty lists, announced his mission to the sister of a private who had been reported as wounded. He was invited to enter, and the girl proceeded to give him the information of which he came in search, but her girl chum, who was present, had a grievance against the press, which she proceeded to air.

"What do you fellows mean by putting in a lot of the stuff you do?" she enquired indignantly.

"What stuff?" asked the reporter mildly.

"Silly stuff," she charged. "Here with a lot of fine young men being killed and wounded, you've nothing better to do than fill up the papers with pieces about Lord Strathcona's horse being wounded!"

"I'm afraid I don't understand you," said the newspaper man. "I don't remember seeing anything of that kind in any paper."

"Then I'll show you," snapped out the girl. "I haven't read the foolish thing myself, for I wouldn't waste the time, but there's the heading."

Thereupon she displayed before his eyes the front page of his own paper, from which stood out the black-letter caption: "STRATHCONA HORSE BADLY CUT UP."

"Now what have you to say?" she asked triumphantly, but the reporter, grasping his hat, retreated ignominiously from the encounter.

B. C. Lumber Trade.

It is shown that the export of logs from British Columbia for 1914, comprising cedar, fir, spruce, hemlock, pine, balsam fir, and cottonwood, amounted to 65,678,054 feet board measure. The total value of unsawn exports, in addition, amounted to $1,100,000. A table is given in the report which shows that shipments of B. C. lumber cargoes to foreign countries in 1914, however, amounted to but an infinitesimal amount of what went abroad from Washington and Oregon.

Good luck is but another name for common sense.

Famous Zeppelin Gone.

The Zeppelin L3, which has been destroyed, had records to her credit On May 18th, 1914, she rose to a height of 3,125 metres (or close on 10,400 ft.), with seventeen passengers on board. Compared with the German (and world's) aeroplane record of 25,760 ft., this does not seem astonishing, but it was then the best height reached, and, so far as one can hear, it remains the best. On the 22nd of the same month the L3 set out for a long-distance trial, and remained in the air for thirty-four hours, covering a distance of 1,260 miles, and again rising to a height of 10,000 ft.

Schoolboys Make Munitions.

The boys of Oundle School, Northamptonshire, are taking on the manufacture of munitions of war. By the courtesy of a neighbouring firm of engineers, the school is supplied with work of a varied character connected with mines, torpedoes, and torpedo-boats. Boys give one full day per week to the work, and work in batches of twenty-five to thirty, so that about 180 boys (the great majority between the ages of fourteen and seventeen) are thus employed.

How To Keep Silver.

Woollen bags hasten rather than prevent silver from tarnishing. Silver kept in a box lined with unbleached cotton flannel and covered with a loose piece of this at night or kept in bags of unbleached cotton flannel will remain bright a much longer time. A piece thrown over a bureau or dressing table top at night if the articles are silver will save many hours' work. A lump of camphor in the silver drawer or box will also help to prevent tarnish.

GERMANY'S OLONIES.

Now that there is lull at the front is a good oppor nity to pause and consider what ermany has gained by plunging Eu pe into this sanguinary war. She as to have been in Paris in a very short time. She is as far from that city as she was a year ago. London was to be visited by a huge fleet of and all the principal build to have been destroyed. O Zeppelins have soared ov of the metropolis and som and children have been ki no public buildings have stroyed. A mysterious fleet was to convey an army t England, and London wa sacked. England is as saf in the security of her "brigh tight little island" as she eve and as Premier Asquith says s afford to laugh at the scare of vasion. It is true that Germa at present in temporary posse of Belgium. But if she—the st est and best-equipped military p in the world—can find any glo vanquishing poor little Bel she is welcome to it. It was ha worth the expenditure of million money and the loss of the flower of her immense army. The Kaiser will enter Warsaw in state and th Fatherland will reverberate with paeans of rapture at this great victory. But it will be short-lived. The Russians have wonderful powers of recuperation; and every yard of Russian territory Germany now occupies she will have to give up eventually, with the loss of thousands of her soldiers.

That is all Germany has gained by this war. When we come to consider what she has lost it is a much easier matter. Hardly sufficient prominence, it seems to us, is given to the loss of German colonies. Since the war began 450,000 square miles of German colonial possessions have been occupied by the Entente Allies. This area nearly equals the combined European areas of Germany and Austria-Hungary. At the present time 450,000 square miles of German colonies, out of a total of 1,100,000, are in the hands of Germany's enemies, so that she has lost nearly half her colonies. We know now that the Kaiser had planned to change the whole map of South Africa. General Botha has exposed the nice little plot. He said maps had been discovered re-casting the chart of Africa on the basis of a peace to be concluded at Rome in 1916. The whole of Africa south of the Equator was marked "Greater Germany," except for a minute fragment of territory labelled "Boer Reserve." At the outbreak of the war the Kaiser told Col. Maritz that he should not only acknowledge the independence of South Africa "but even guarantee it." We know the value the Kaiser attaches to guarantees, and if the rebellion had succeeded the Boers would doubtless have found themselves dupes in the hands of Germany. But although Great Britain had her hands full this rebellion was easily quelled, and another of the Kaiser's fond dreams was shattered.

Pessimists are like the poor—they are always with us. But a slight reflection upon all that Germany has lost and the little that she has gained should convince the most confirmed pessimist that after all the Allies have gained considerably by this war. It must never be forgotten that it is through the British Navy that this has been made possible. With the occupation of Warsaw Germany's few triumphs will cease. We are about to enter the second year of the war, and it is an easy matter to prophecy that the coming year will be a disastrous one for Germany. The withering blast of Nemesis will fall upon her; and the proud and domineering nation, which was to rule the whole world, will find herself divested of her colonies, her commerce almost irretrievably lost, her magnificent army depleted and demoralized, and with an enormous debt which will be like a nightmare to her for more than one generation.

CURRENT COMMENT

Among the strongest features of the Becker case is the failure of the defence to put in the plea of insanity.

There is not an atom of comfort in the knowledge that it's not the heat but the humidity that makes one feel like giving up.

The Kaiser will have a right to put a high value upon his triumph in Poland. He has paid a tremendous price for it.

Anyhow in one corner of the civilized world the great war is crowded into the background just now as a matter of public interest. There is a general election on in Manitoba.

And now the Huns are spouting flame against the Allies' trenches. It seems that German soldiers as well as German journalists are spitfires.—Hamilton Herald.

"We in America, far removed from the war of European barbarians," etc. Thus says the Pittsburg Dispatch. And if the Kaiser, incensed at the tone of the latest American note, were to force war upon the States, we suppose the American people also would have to be classed as barbarians.—Hamilton Herald.

Thinking Americans are beginning to see clearly that if the democracy of France and Great Britain sinks beneath the German attack and a German empire of 165,000,000 springs up in Europe, our democracy must fight or go under. We are already a year late in starting to get ready.—Brooklyn Eagle.

As the steamer was leaving the harbor of Athens a well-dressed young passenger approached the captain and pointing to the distant hills, inquired: "What is that white stuff on the hills, captain?" "That is snow, madam," replied the captain. "Well," remarked the lady, "I thought so myself, but a gentleman just now told me it was Greece."—Evening Wisconsin.

England's ultimate hope is for a long era of peace without competitive armament which Germany will be powerless to trouble or disturb. The British people believe that such a period of opportunity for civilized progress is worth almost any price that the present may call for. Her hope is that in the warmth and light of such an epoch she can easily make such advance both in material prosperity and moral evolution as will compensate her not only for the gold and silver, but also for the blood and tears that she is lavishing today upon the cause she espoused.—New York Evening Sun.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

The English are clever people. They do not disdain to learn even from the enemy if it promise them an advantage. On our part we ought not to be more prudish than our enemy cousins. What to us appears most worthy of imitation in this fight for existence to which British selfishness and British rapacity have driven us is the brutal egoism on which both their politics and their mode of warfare are founded. We shall be less dainty than hitherto, both in the choice of our weapons and in the way in which we apply them, be they Zeppelins or submarines.

That our enemies appreciate these new weapons they have amply shown by their attempts, utterly unsuccessfull though they were, to imitate them. They shall shortly find that they underestimated their capacities, for, thanks to the lessons in ruthlessness we have learned from the wise men of London, we shall surprise them with new types of these war engines which will destroy thousands where hitherto lives have been in units.—Kolnische Zeitung.

The Poets' Corner

ON TO BERLIN

On to Berlin is the watchword,
  On to Berlin in a day;
Or the foe will advance to our doorstep
  While Canada is at play.

Now is the time to enlist, boys,
  No time left for delay;
Never mind the way of recruiting,
  Fall into line today.

Be a man among men today, boys,
  To the right or the left do not stray;
You comrades will stand to the front, boys;
  Now back them, and win the day.

All in vain would be Jellicoe's ardor,
  Or Lloyd George and Kitchener, too,
If each man at his post isn't valiant,
  The odds will fall back on you.

Who cares, do we say? Let us reckon
  What hangs in the balance today:
Our mothers and sisters and babies,
  And the villain with power to slay.

Today the power is in your hands—
  Right now is the only time;
When once Kaiserism has gripped you,
  In vain you'll lament and pray.

Heed the warning of poor little Belgium,
  The loyal in heart and trust;
Today, oh, so crushed and bleeding
  Her women-folk biting the dust.

For the sake of your mothers who bore you,
  For the sake of your sister fair,
For the sake of our Canada—Fair Land,
  For the sake of Old England dear.

Oh, let not your conscience slumber,
  Ye millions still in arrears;
Pay your debt to your nation who loves you,
  "To the ranks" mid a nation's cheers.

RAILWAY ENGINES

Speed of Fast Locomotives and How It Is Attained.

BIG WHEELS A NECESSITY.

But Equally Important Are the Steam Valves, the Grates In the Firebox and the Ability to Make Steam Rapidly. Other Vital Factors.

The average person thinks that the bigger the locomotive and the greater the diameter of its driving wheels the faster it will go, and in the popular mind these are the only reasons one engine can "run faster" than another.

The locomotive, athough one of the simplest and best known of machines, embodies numerous devices not visible to the eye of the casual observer which are most vital elements in its efficiency and speed. For example, much of the power of the big express engine depends upon the steam valves and the grates in the firebox quite as much as it does upon the mere bigness of the driving wheels. At the same time it is true that large wheels in ordinary fast running are a convenience and in the very highest speeds a necessity. It becomes necessary, of course, to lighten the load as the wheels are enlarged and increase the speed, which introduces the second phase of the problem—the grates and heating surface.

Fast engines, to continue their work for a long time at a stretch, must make steam very rapidly. To accomplish this the heat of the fire must come in contact with the water at a great many points. A large firebox involves a grate of large area to admit air to the fire—a difficult matter since but a small distance separates the wheels, the width of the firebox being thus limited, while the length must come within the limit to which the fireman can throw his coal.

A third factor is the counterbalance, the solid filling fixed between the spokes of the driving wheels opposite the connecting rods. This is to balance the weight of the cranks, parallel rods and connections and, in addition, the force on the wheels of the weight of the moving piston in the cylinder. Lacking this balance the wheels would roll too rapidly when the rods and connections were moving downward and too slowly when they were moving upward, thus causing a jerky motion.

However, as the influence of the weight is varied by the centrifugal force, which, in turn, is greater or less according as the speed is high or low, it happens that a counterweight which is suitable at a speed of forty or fifty miles an hour produces an injurious "pound" on the rails at seventy-five miles an hour.

It follows, therefore, that the weight must be heavier than the rods and connections because a part of its office is to balance the piston and other parts that slide horizontally and are uninfluenced by centrifugal force. As the speed increases the downward motion of the weight, as that part of the wheel rolls over to the front, makes the wheel with its load press down upon the rail with so much more force than it does when the weight is moving upward on the other side that the effect upon the rail is as if a heavy blow were delivered upon it with a hammer.

So to use an engine successfully at the highest speed it is necessary to make the counterweight lighter than would be correct for moderate speeds. The light weights are not necessarily dangerous at the lower speed, but their use would cause unnecessary wear and tear on the engine and the track and in some cases would even cause unpleasant jerks upon the passenger cars. For this reason fast engines are seldom built unless they can be used in fast service all the time.

Properly proportioned valve openings are absolutely essential to a fast engine. These admit the steam to the opposite ends of the cylinder alternately, as the connecting rod moves first forward and then backward, and in a fast engine they must admit a large volume of steam very quickly. The valves must be moved so as first to open one passage and close the other and then as rapidly as possible close the first and open the second.

It will be noticed by even the most casual observer that the opening to let the steam out of the cylinders into the smokestack is several times as large as that for admitting the "live" steam. But even with this it requires a considerable amount of power to force the steam out with sufficient quickness. This must be done in the fraction of a second.

There are many engines that can get steam into the cylinders quickly enough and that are otherwise all right for high speed, but which are not so arranged to get rid of this steam which has been used and is only in the way. It is this rapid expulsion of the "dead" steam that makes the vigorous puffs at the top of the chimney that seem to indicate that the locomotive is doing a tremendous amount of work. It should be remembered, however, that this noise is not the result of real work, but only of this after operation, which engine builders would avoid. There is a class of locomotives, those arranged on the "compound system," in which the puffs are so faint that the engine would seem to be doing nothing at all.—Washington Star.

Volunteers Good As Trained Men

Modern Fighting Merely a Matter of Nervous Stamina

LONDON, July 31.—Dr. Morton Prince said today: "I expect to make a tour of the hospitals of Europe studying cases of nervous diseases during my stay in London. War has upset many of our preconceived theories regarding the nerves. Personally, I never anticipated warfare would attack the trained men in this direction in the way it has. One result of the struggle seems to me to be that it has placed the volunteer practically on the level with the trained soldiers.

"It appears no longer necessary to train a man for years in order to make him a good soldier. Modern fighting seems largely a matter of nervous stamina. Consequently very little military training is able to make a man physically fit. Coming from a good healthy stock, he is absolutely equal to a professional fighting machine."

Uniting the Empire

Comments in London on the Welcome to Borden

LONDON, July 31.—The Daily News a Liberal party, today says:

"The readiness and enthusiasm with which the overseas Dominions have accepted their part in the struggle for the preservation of British liberties is perhaps the most gratifying feature of the warm welcome given Sir Robert Borden at the Guild Hall and is a small witness of the feeling of that devotion which has been aroused in this country. Whatever the reactions upon political associations may be we cannot yet guess, but they, too, will undergo important changes as a result of the experiences through which we are passing. The Kaiser, who hoped to bring the Empire to ruin will in the end have given it new and deeper foundations."

PROBING DEATH OF A WELLAND CANAL GUARD

WELLAND, July 31.—The inquest to enquire into the death of Private Leonard Bellamy of the Welland Canal guard was reopened by Dr. Colbeck, coroner. The impression seemed to gain strength that he was the victim of four play. The inquest was again adjourned until Friday.

The evidence was such as to direct attention to two men, both of whom are now in custody. Both are Americans who came here from Buffalo and both have been in trouble since their connection with the canal guard force. They are Harry Kurtz and Benjamin Chase. The latter is alleged to be a dope fiend and was for some time connected with the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, where he is said to have had a good position. He was discharged from the canal guard for firing his rifle over the heads of two officers who were crossing the aqueduct while he was on guard.

The evidence showed that he was seen in Welland on the night of the tragedy, and not since. His arrest was effected in Toronto on Monday, where he is said to have secured drugs from a doctor and later returned to the doctor's office and stole morphine. When arrested for this offence he gave the name of Hamilton, but a military officer from this post went to Toronto and identified the prisoner as Chase. It was shown that he was a close friend of Kurtz. While the motive of Kurtz and Chase may be only a personal one, if any, the fact that they came from a foreign country may have a deeper significance.

War Notes

It is officially announced that Lord Dalmeny, son and heir of Lord Rosebery, had been wounded in France.

The Hamilton Board of Control by adopting the report of the Mayor and City Auditor Davis, decided to insure all the Hamilton soldiers who have gone to the front or who are going.

Adolphe Messimy, former Minister of War, was severely wounded in the thigh by a shell splinter while on the Vosges front, where he was in command of a battalion of light infantry.

The fire, Police and Jail Committee of Hamilton agreed to protect all firemen who enlisted for war services to the extent of $1,000 life insurance. This would not apply, however, to accident insurance.

The campaign for 200 machine guns from Hamilton continues in a most encouraging manner. Up to today 121 guns were assured. The women and girls of the city are also raising a fund for a gun.

As a result of the demand for men for the war farm help is very scarce in this district. Farmers are working night and day to get in their crops. They are holding bees to help each other, and the women are also working in the fields.

It is expected that recruiting meetings to be addressed by prominent men and returned soldiers will be held in all parts of the province on Wednesday next, the anniversary of Britain's entry in the war against Germany and Austria.

Many affecting scenes were witnessed when Hamilton bade farewell to the larger portion of the 76th Battalion, which included the volunteers of the 13th Royal Regiment and the 91st Highlanders. The Mayor bade the boys good-bye at the drill hall, in a most encouraging address. The men then marched through the streets of the city before entraining at the Stuart Street G.T.R. Station for Camp Niagara.

An Austrian named Kallchuck, who enlisted several days ago for active service in the 25th Brant Dragoons, was arrested by Chief Constable Selmin and Detective Chapman and is now in the cells at Brantford station. Kallchuck swore that he was a Russian, but it has been learned that he is of Austrian parentage and his motive in going to the front is suspected. He will probably be sent to a detention camp.

SAY POLICE HID FACTS

When N. Y. Patrol Knocked Woman to Death

NEW YORK, July 30.—A brief announcement was made today to the coroner's office that Mrs. Carrie Kayser had died in Bellevue Hospital from a fractured skull. Mrs. Kayser was knocked down and run over by a police patrol auto wagon on Tuesday morning in front of the Park Avenue Hotel and the relatives charge that a deliberate attempt was made by the police to suppress facts regarding the accident.

They say that Mrs. Kayser was rushed to the hospital where it was reported her injuries were slight, and that her relatives were not to be notified.

The relatives of Mrs. Kayser heard of the affair through the efforts of a reporter who witnessed the accident and they allege that at police headquarters information was refused because the accident was one in which the city was involved. Arthur Kayser made the charge after he learned of his mother's death.

FATHER AND SON ENLIST

Elder Man Underwent Surgical Operation in order to Qualify

WOODSTOCK July 31.—Thomas and Arthur Fordham, father and son, came from Ingersoll to Woodstock this morning to enlist for overseas service. The son was accepted by the medical examiners and was placed on the strength of the 34th battalion, but the father was told that a minor surgical operation is necessary before he can be accepted. So determined was he to serve his country that he immediately made arrangements and will enlist as soon as he recovers from its effects. He is of English birth and has for ten years past been connected with the textile industry in Ingersoll.

TATTOO AT WATERLOO

WATERLOO, Ont., July 31.—The Military Tattoo held here last evening under the auspices of the Waterloo Musical Society band was a great success. Full ten thousand people were in attendance. Special trains from Elmira, Galt and Preston brought in very large crowds. The musical part of the program was contributed by the 108th Regiment band of Berlin, Galt, Kiltie band, Preston, Hespler, Elmira and Waterloo bands. The 108th Regiment in full strength, with bugle band, also attended and with the girl cadets came in for great applause. The sham battle by the 108th Regiment, and one of the largest events of its kind in western Ontario was brought to a close by a great display of fireworks.

CROCKER LAND A MYTH

SO DECLARES DONALD B. MACMILLAN, THE EXPLORER.

In a Letter From Some Unknown Point In the Far North He Describes His Adventures and Says That Although at First He and His Companions Thought They Saw Land It Soon Disappeared.

Donald B. MacMillan writes from an unnamed point in the Arctic regions a letter to the New York Tribune, received by his agent in Copenhagen and forwarded by the latter to London. The envelope is postmarked "Kjobenhavn, May 28." The explorer's letter, which is undated, is as follows:

"Crocker Land, reported seen by Peary in 1906, and indicated on the latest maps, does not exist. I succeeded in covering the whole distance of 1,200 miles in 72 days. To us, standing on the heights of Cape Thomas Hubbard, and for several days on the Polar Sea, there was every appearance of an immense tract of land extending along 120 degree of the horizon, hills, valleys, and snow-capped peaks.

"Farther travel toward the northwest caused it to change its direction with the revolving of the sun. It constantly varied in extent and character, and finally, on our last march, disappeared entirely.

"The expedition left Etah on February 13, 1914, one week before the return of the sun. After proceeding 90 miles an outbreak of mumps and influenza among the Esquimaus and the poor condition of the dogs compelled us to return to headquarters. The reorganization party fed up the dogs on walrus meat, and left again on March 11, with ten sledges and 55 dogs, driven by seven natives, Elmer Ekblaw, Ensign Fitzhugh Green, and myself. By following the edge of the open water we crossed Smith Sound in six hours.

"Profiting by the experience of Cook and Sverdrup, we decided to cross Ellesmere Land by way of the Beistadt Glacier. We ascended to a height of 4,700 feet, the lowest temperature experienced being 55 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit. Ekblaw's feet were so badly frosted on the glacier that I was compelled to send him back from the head of Bay Fiord. Ensign Green returned to Hayes Sound for oil and pemmican, and was to join the main party at Cape Thomas Hubbard.

"Perfect weather and smooth ice in Eureka Sound enabled us to cover 90 miles in three days. Large herds of musk oxen, white wolves and caribou furnished meat for dogs and men. At Hvitberg we found a cache of milk and pemmican left by Sverdrup 12 years ago. Both were in good condition. We reached the northern end of Axel Heiberg Land on April 11.

"Ensign Green came in on schedule time, April 12, with supplies needed for the Polar Sea dash. The supporting party went back from here. The main party for the attack on Crocker Land consisted of only four—two natives, Green and myself. I fund here two records and a piece of an American flag left by Peary in 1906. The first ten miles on the Polar Sea afforded good traveling over a hard rolling surface. The next twenty consisted of a chaotic mass of pressure ridges, open water, and newly-frozen leads.

"We were held up twice for a few hours and crossed thirty-four leads in all. Beyond the leads, we were favored with the very best of going making twenty and thirty miles a day. We saw a mirage of sea ice repeatedly, which greatly resembled land. This extended well around into the north, over Peary's trail of 1908, and at times joined the northern shore of Grant Land. On April 23 we reached the supposed site of Crocker Land. The meridian altitude of 108.22 east and latitude 82.30. The weather was perfect and no land was in sight.

"Throughout March the leads and pressure ridges tended toward the southwest. From our last camp, as far as the eye could reach, it seemed one chaotic mass of ice leads and pressure ridges intersecting without definite direction. The general character of the ice would indicate the action of very strong tides or currents, or possibly a large area broken in passage over shoal ground. There was no bottom at 150 fathoms.

"We arrived back at Cape Thomas Hubbard on April 28, and reached Etah on May 21, a few days before the breaking up of Smith Sound. I have been fortunate in finding some records of previous expeditions. I have two of Dr. Kane's expedition of 61 years ago, and have also Commander Nares. A record written by Captain Feilden, the naturalist, was found at Cape Sabine.

"Our plans for next year, the spring of 1915, are as follows: Green and myself will start on a 1,500-mile trip to explore the region south of Ellef and Amund Ringes Land, and if game is plentiful we will return by way of Jones Sound.

"Leaving on March 1, we should be back by June 11. Ekblaw and Tanqueray will explore the Greely Fiord and Lake Hazen region in Grant Land, returning by Kennedy Channel. They are both doing fine work in geology, botany and zoology.

"Thus far we have received no messages by wireless. Allen is here. He has never let up for a minute, and is still working faithfully, hoping to get results from one of the outer islands, to which he has moved his whole equipment. We have plenty of food and fuel to last till August, 1915. The work of the expedition will then be through, and we will return home in that month.

"If the ship should fail to reach us, friends at home should not worry, as we can easily live as the natives do. The men are all well up to date and eager for sledging to begin."

Love, Life and Eugenics.

Suppose the eugenists could have their way and banish love, who would care to live? What purpose would life have? It would have none. There would be no life, only an existence, wearisome and dull. The world feels that love is beautiful, it sees in practice that it is true. Love makes the world, love keeps it, only to love shall it be given in the future. Therefore have poets sung it and story tellers told of it; therefore do eyes shine and cheeks burn for it. Therefore it is the soul of art, of music, of literature.—Atlantic Monthly.

"Do you enjoy your position?" the man asked as the porter was brushing his coat.

Sometimes They Come True.

The King's Scapegoat

An Account of a Duel Fought In the Sixteenth Century.

By F. A. MITCHEL

[This story is more than a story. It is a historical account of a duel that occurred 400 years ago and a fine illustration of the difference between the method of settling affairs of honor among men in the olden time and the beginning of the nineteenth century, when mortal combat to settle difficulties between individuals may be said to have received its quietus in the new world in the death of Alexander Hamilton at the hands of Aaron Burr.]

"How comes it, Guichot, that you are able to make so brave a show with the revenues which you have, for I know that they are not excessive?"

The question was asked of Guy Chabot Sieur de Jarnac by the dauphin, who afterward became Henry II., king of France.

Jarnac, embarrassed at such a question, was unfortunate in the choice of words used in his reply. He said that his stepmother kept him, giving him everything he required. Henry deliberately misconstrued the statement and reported to members of the court that Jarnac had boasted of a love affair with his stepmother.

Horrified, indignant at such an accusation, the young man publicly declared that whoever had made the assertion was "a malicious villain and had wickedly lied." Then, hastening to his father's chateau, he threw himself at his feet and protested that he was innocent of the charge. Having convinced his father, he returned to court intent upon avenging the injury done him.

The dauphin found himself in a very unpleasant position. When princes err there must be a scapegoat. Francis Virowne, Sieur de Chatagnerie, a courtier in favor both with King Francis and the dauphin, a young warrior of great prowess, though a friend of Jarnac, seeing that he would confer a great favor on the future king by doing so, took up the quarrel in his behalf, declaring that it was to him and him alone that Jarnac had made his boast.

Duels at this time were a part of the feudal tradition and law of France, requiring the consent of the king. Francis referred the matter to the privy council, which after a long debate recommended that permission to fight be refused. But no sooner had the king died and the dauphin ascended the throne than Chatagnerie addressed a letter to the new king, repeating his accusation, whereupon Jarnac made a request that the duel be permitted to take place. The king consented, and arrangements for the contest were forthwith made.

Chatagnerie was twenty-six years old, while his adversary was thirty-six. The former was also of great strength and very ready with his sword. He was continually boasting of his feats of arms and ever ready to pick a quarrel. In short, he was just the man to vindicate his royal master in his contemptible charge.

At that time the same rule of the code, that the challenged party should have the choice of arms, existed as it has since. Jarnac had accused his adversary of a lie and had been challenged; therefore he was permitted to fight in any way he pleased. Upon the advice of his fencing master he demanded the heavy armor and long double edged swords in vogue a century before. The reason for this was that his opponent had been wounded in battle in the right arm and had never regained perfect use of it, and the heavy iron gauntlet and sword would naturally hamper the movements of this arm. Chatagnerie's great strength gave him an advantage in closing with his enemy, downing him and stabbing him while prostrate. The armor in this case would be to his disadvantage. Jarnac also stipulated for heavy shields, which would be an advantage to the weaker party, who would naturally be on the defensive.

Chatagnerie seemed to have no fear whatever of making an easy conquest of his adversary. As he was accustomed to boast of the deeds he had performed, he now boasted of the deed he was about to perform. He ordered a banquet to be served in his tent on the field, to which he invited the court to celebrate his victory.

Naturally the affair was the sensation of the day. The courtiers were largely on the side of the king's scapegoat, and Henry did not deny that his own sympathies were with Chatagnerie. The provincial nobility, of whom the Jarnac family were members, regarded Jarnac as the defender of their honor and looked upon him as their champion. One of the powerful Guise family was to act as second for the royal scapegoat, and the Duke de Vendome of a rival family to the Guises asked the king's permission to act for Jarnac. He was refused and, disgusted at the king's favoritism, withdrew, followed by the other princes of the blood. The constable of France then filled the position.

The king having announced his intention to preside at the encounter, the constable made arrangements in accordance with the dignity of the occasion. The field having been selected, a space for the combat was marked out and suitable accommodations provided for the king, court and nobility, the king and his tribune in the center, the tribune being the constable and marshals of France, who were the judges.

The day of the duel was a beautiful morning in midsummer. Crowds from Paris began early to pour forth toward the battleground. The archers of the guard took the place of modern policemen in keeping the crowd from breaking through the barrier and invading the field of battle. The king arrived, attended by his sister, princes of the blood and many nobles. A singular feature was an executioner and his assistants, who were intended to take charge of the corpse of the vanquished, in case he was killed, for hanging on a gibbet.

As soon as the king was seated the herald advanced and proclaimed the combat, asserting that no one should interfere with either of the combatants on peril of his life. Chatagnerie left his tent, accompanied by some 500 of his friends. Jarnac next appeared, escorted by the grand equerry and 120 gentlemen wearing his colors. The shields of the combatants were hung on either side of the king. Then came the ceremony of the presentation of the arms, which was principally a testing of the weapons. This having been accomplished, there was another long proclamation from the herald, and the combatants having paraded around the field, preceded by their arms, after a religious ceremony in which each affirmed his cause to be a just one, they were conducted to their stations, and the herald, advancing, shouted, "Laissez aller les bons combatants," which means in plain American, "Let 'em go!"

Such is a condensation of the preliminaries to a duel in high life during the middle of the sixteenth century. The fight was by no means commensurate with the preparation, for it was decided quickly. The duelists advanced, Jarnac slowly, protecting himself with his shield; Chatagnerie rapidly and full of confidence. As soon as they met the latter sprang upon his opponent, aiming a crushing blow at his head. Jarnac, instead of warding off the blow with his sword, as was to be expected, received it on his shield and, ducking, made a thrust for his opponent's legs. He struck Chatagnerie in the hollow of the knee. Before the latter could recover himself Jarnac repeated the thrust at the same point and cut the tendons, giving a new phrase to dueling—the coup de Jarnac, which in those days was not a foul, but perfectly legitimate. Chatagnerie staggered, dropped his sword and fell, the blood flowing from his wound.

A cry of amazement greeted this conquest of the champion swordsman of France within a few seconds by one who had no especial reputation as a man at arms.

By the code of that day three courses were open to the victor—he might kill his opponent and hand his body over to the executioner to be hanged; he might spare his life after exacting a restoration of his honor by the vanquished confessing himself to be in error, or he might surrender him to the king. Jarnac called upon his enemy to restore him his honor. Chatagnerie's reply was an attempt to rise, but it failed. Jarnac, then advancing to the king, said:

"Sire, I entreat you to esteem me a man of honor. I give you Chatagnerie's life. It is our youth alone which is the cause of this trouble. Let no imputation rest either on his family or upon him on account of his offense, for I surrender him to you."

But the king, not realizing that his scapegoat was unable to continue the fight, made no answer. Jarnac raised his eyes to heaven. "Lord, I am not worthy, for it is not to myself, but to thee, that I owe the victory." Then, returning to Chatagnerie, he begged him to surrender. But the scapegoat, raising himself on one knee and regaining his lost sword, endeavored to strike. Jarnac stepped back, saying, "Do not move or I will kill you." "Kill me," replied the vanquished man and fell back exhausted from loss of blood.

Again Jarnac went to the king and implored him to give him the victory, a victory which condemned the king himself, but Henry refused. Jarnac, expecting that his former friend would bleed to death, cried: "Sire, he is dying. For the love of heaven, accept his life at my hands!" Henry, refusing to pronounce his own condemnation, still refused till the constable joined his entreaties to those of Jarnac. Then Henry, seeing that the sympathies of the assembly were against him, said to Jarnac, "You have done your duty, and your honor should be restored to you." And he ordered that Chatagnerie be removed. Jarnac had the right to be escorted from the field by his followers to the sound of martial music, but he declined the honor. When he refused the king, having had time to curb his disappointment, called him to the tribune and, as the victor was about to kneel to him, embraced him, saying that he had fought like Caesar and spoken like Aristotle.

Never was there such multiplicity of preparation for so brief a contest, never a more flagrant case of a man guilty of a contemptible act accepting the defense of another and being judge of the issue, withholding the verdict until forced by opinion to pronounce it.

At the conclusion of the tournament the brilliant assembly broke up, and, the king leading the way, all returned to Paris.

Jarnac's victory fell no less heavily on the king than on his defender. Chatagnerie felt his fall so keenly that he refused to live after it. The surgeons bound his knee with bandages, but he tore them off. Again they put them on, and again the miserable man tore them off, repeating the act till at last he bled to death.

CHAPTER XX

"You Are Romantic."

Human nature is prone to argument; a person will often in the course of a few moments ring himself or herself to the bar of conscience, and accuse, excuse, and sum up the case in the twinkling of an eye.

On arriving at the lodge-gates Phillis began to take herself to task. Conscience, that "makes cowards of us all," began its small inner remonstrance; then followed self-flagellation and much belaboring of herself with many remorseful terms. She was a pitiful thing compared to Nan; she was conventional; there were no limits to her pride. Where were that freedom and nobility of soul which she once fancied would sweep over wordly prejudices, and carry her into purer air? She was still choking in the fogs of mere earthly exhalations; no wonder Nan was a little disappointed in her, though she was far to kind to say so. Well, she was disappointed in herself.

By this time she had reached the hall door; and now she began to hold up her head more boldly, and to look about her; when a very solemn-looking butler confronted her, she said to herself, "It will be all the same a hundred years hence, and I am determined this time not to be beaten;" and then she asked for Mrs. Cheyne with something of her old sprightliness, and nothing could exceed the graceful ease of her entrance.

All the Challoners walked well. There was a purity of health about them that made them delight in movement and every bodily exercises, —an elasticity of gait that somehow attracted attention.

No girls danced better than they. And when they had the chance, which was seldom, they could ride splendidly. Their skating was a joy to see, and made one wish that the ice would last forever, that one could watch such light, skimming practice; and as for tennis, no other girl had a chance of being chosen for a partner unless the Challoners good naturedly held aloof, which ten times out of twelve they were sure to do.

Phillis, who, from her pale complexion, was supposed to possess the least vitality, delighted in exercise for its own sake "It is a pleasure only to be alive and to know it," was a favorite speech with her on summer mornings, when the shadows were blowing lightly hither and thither, and the birds had so much to say that it took them until evening saying it.

Mrs. Cheyne who was lying on her couch watched with admiring eyes the girl's straightforward walk, so alert and business-like, so free from fuss and consciousness, and held out her hand with a more cordial welcome than she was accustomed to show her visitors.

It was a long room; and as the summer dusk was falling, and there was only a shaded lamp beside Mrs. Cheyne, it was full of dim corners. Nevertheless, Phillis piloted herself without hesitation to the illuminated circle.

"This is good of you, Miss Challoner, to take me at my word. But where is your sister? I wanted to look at her again, for it is long since I have seen any one so pretty. Miss Mewlstone, this is the good Samarily."

"Ah, just so," returned Miss Mewlstone. And a soft, plump hand touched Phillis's and then she went on picking up stitches and taking no further notice.

"Nan could not come," observed Phillis. "She had to run down to Beach House to report to mother. We hope she is coming home to-morrow. But, as you were so kind as to write, I thought I would just call and inquire about your foot. And then it would be easier to explain things than to write about it."

"Oh! so your mother is coming home!" returned Mrs. Cheyne, with so much interest in her voice that Mewlstone left off counting to look at her. ("Just so, just so," Phillis heard her mutter.) "You must have worked hard to get ready for her so soon. When my foot will allow me to cross a room without hobbling, I will do myself the pleasure of calling on her. But that will be neither this week nor the next, I am afraid. But I shall see a good deal of you and your sister before then," she concluded, with the graciousness of one who knows she is conferring an unusual honor.

"I do not know," faltered Phillis. And then she sat upright, and looked her hostess full in the face. "That will be for you to decide when you hear what I have to say. But I fear" —with a very poor attempt at a smile —"that we shall see very little of each other in the future."

"Oh, there is a mystery, is there?" returned Mrs. Cheyne, with a little scorn in her manner; and her mouth took one of the downward curves that Mr. Drummond so thoroughly disliked. She had taken an odd fancy to these girls, especially to Phillis, and had thought about them a good deal during a sleepless, uneasy night. Their simplicity, their straightforward unconsciousness, had attracted her in spite of her cynicism. But at the first suspicion of mystery she withdrew into herself rather haughtily. "Do speak out, I beg, Miss Challoner; for if there be one thing that makes me impatient, it is to have anything implied."

"I am quite of your opinion," replied Phillis, with equal haughtiness, only it sat more strangely on her girlishness. "That is why I am here to-night,—just to inquire after your foot and explain things"

"Well?" still more impatiently, for this woman was a spoiled child, and hated to be thwarted, and was undisciplined and imperious enough to ruin all her own chances of happiness.

'I told you that we were very poor," went on Phillis, in a sweet and steady voice; "but that did not seem to impress you much, and I thought how noble that was."—catching her breath an instant; "but it will make a difference and shock you dreadfully, as it did Mr. Drummond, when I tell you that we are dressmakers,—Nan and Dulce and I; at least that will be our future ocupation."

"Ah, just so!" ejaculated Miss Mewlstone; but she said it with her lips far apart, and a mistiness came into her sleepy blue eyes. Perhaps, though she was stout and middle-aged and breathed a little too heavily at times, she remembered—long ago when she was young and poor and had to wage a bitter war with the world—when she ate the dry bread and drank the bitter water of dependence and felt herself ill nourished by such unpalatable sustenance. "Oh just so, poor thing!" And a little round tear dripped on to the ball of scarlet fleecy wool.

But Mrs. Cheyne listened to the announcement in far different mood. There was an incredulous stare at Philis, as though she suspected her of a joke; and then she laughed a dry, harsh laugh, that was not quite pleasant to hear.

"Oh, this is droll, passing droll!" she said, and leaned back on her cushions, and drew her Indian cashmer round her and frowned a litle.

"I am glad you find it so," returned Phillis, who was nonplussed at this, and did not know what to say, and was a little angry in consequence; and then she got up from her chair with a demonstration of spirit. "I am glad you find it so; but to us it is sad earnestness!"

"What! are you going?" asked Mrs. Cheyne, with a keen glance through her half-shut eyes at poor Phillis standing so tall and straight before her. "And you have not told me the reason for taking so strange a step!"

"The reason lies in our poverty and paucity of resources," was Phillis's curt reply.

"It is not to make a sensation, then? no, I did not mean that," as Phillis shot an indignant glance at her,—"not exactly; but there is no knowing what the emancipated girl will do. Of course I have no right to question, who was a stranger to you four-and-twenty hours ago, and had never heard the name of Challoner, except that it was a good and an old name; but when one sees young things like you about to forfeit caste and build up a barrier between yourselves and your equals that the bravest will fear to pass; it seems as though one must lift up one's voice in protest."

"Thank you; but it will be of no use," returned Phillis, coldly.

"You are determined to make other people's dresses?" And here her lip curled a little, perhaps involuntarily.

"We must make dresses or starve; for our fingers are cleverer than our brains," replied Phillis, defiantly; for she knew nothing about it, and her powers were so immature and unfledged that she had never tried her wings, and had no notion whether she could fly or not, and yet no girl had a clearer head. "We have chosen work that we know we can do well, and we mean not to be ashamed of our occupation. In the old days ladies used to spin and weave, and no one blamed them, though they were noble; and if my work will bring me money, and keep the mother comfortable, I see nothing that will prevent my doing it."

"Ah, you are romantic, Miss Challoner; you will soon be taught matter-of-fact!'

'I am willing to learn anything, but I must choose my teachers," retorted Phillis, with a little heat, for the word "romantic," and the satirical droop of Mrs Cheyne's lip made her decidedly cross. "But I must not detain you any more with our uninteresting affairs," dropping a little courtesy, half in pique and half in mockery, for her spirits were rising under this rough treatment.

"It is far from uninteresting; I have not heard anything so exciting for a long time. Well, perhaps you had better go before I say anything very rude, for I am terribly outspoken, and I think you are all silly self-willed young people." Then, as Phillis bridled her neck like an untamed colt, she caught hold of the girl's dress to detain her, and the sharpness passed out of her eyes. "Now, don't go away and believe that I think any worse of you for telling me this. I am a cross-grained body, and contradiction makes me worse. I don't know how I shall act; I must have time to consider this extraordinary bit of news. But all the same, whatever I do, whether I know you or do not know you, I shall always think you the very bravest girl I ever saw." And then she let her go, and Phillis, with her head in the air and her thoughts all topsy-turvy, marched out of the room

But when she reached the end of the corridor there was a soft but distinctly audible breathing behind her, and, as in Mr. Drummond's case Miss Mewlstone's shadowy gray gown swept between her and the door.

"Miss Mewlstone, how you startled me! but the carpets are so soft and thick!"

'Yes, indeed! just so, my dear; but Phillip must be asleep as he does not answer the bell, and so I thought I would let you out. You are young to walk alone; shall I throw a shawl over my cap, and walk down the road with you?"

THE CANADIAN BORN.

Only Two of Our Premiers Have Been Natives of the Dominion.

What, for the practical purposes of everyday life, is a Canadian? The word "Canadian" is really a political not a racial, designation. As commonly used, it certainly includes those born in the Dominion. But it is also very generally, whether accurately or not, accorded a wider use than that, being extended to apply to those who have definitely made their permanent home in the Dominion. In that sense, Sir John A. Macdonald who came to Canada when but five years old, and was the first Premier of the Dominion, was beyond all question a Canadian, and not a "Scottish" statesman, though he was certainly a Scotsman by birth. But the expression "Canadian" has a wider application even than to those who have definitely made their permanent home here. For example Lord Strathcona and Lord Mount Stephen were both Old Countrymen by birth, both were grown up when they came to Canada, and both returned to the Old Country to spend the evening of their days. Yet one would certainly speak of both as great "Canadians." So that it seems that the expression "Canadian" has, in common parlance, been extended to embrace those whose active careers have been identified with the Dominion.

There have been eight Premiers of the Dominion since Confederation. Of these, three, namely, Sir John A. Macdonald, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, were born in Great Britain. Sir John Macdonald, who came to this country when he was five years old, was born in Dornoch, Sutherlandshire.

The Hon. Alexander Mackenzie was born at Logierait, near Dunkeld, in Perthshire, and received his education in schools at Perth, Moulin, and Dunkeld, subsequently learning the trade of a stonemason in the Old Country. He was a grown-up man when he came to this country, and settled at Kingston, Ont., where he worked for some time as a journeyman builder.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who was born in England—at Rickingthall, in Suffolk—came to this country when he was ten years old.

Of the other five Premiers of the Dominion, only two are "Canadian-born," if one uses that expression, with absolute strictness, in its political sense. For the remaining three were born in Nova Scotia at a time when that Province was not part of Canada, but was a colony by itself. The two "Canadian-born" Premiers are the late Sir J. J. C. Abbott and, of course, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Sir J. J. C. Abbott, who was Premier for less than six months, was born in Quebec, his father, a missionary, having hailed from Cumberland, England. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was born at St. Lin, Quebec.

The three Nova Scotians who attained the Premiership are Sir J. S. D. Thompson, Sir Charles Tupper, and the present Premier. Sir J. S. D. Thompson's father emigrated to Nova Scotia in the year 1844 from Waterford in Ireland. While Sir Charles Tupper was born in Nova Scotia, his ancestors emigrated from the Old Country to New England so far back as the year 1635. It was exactly 61 years ago to-day that Sir Robert Borden was born at Grand Pre, Nova Scotia. His great-great-grandfather was one of the old settlers who went from New England to Nova Scotia in the year 1760.

Of Ontario's seven Premiers every single one of them was born in Canada. And every single one, moreover, was born in the Province of Ontario, from the first Premier, the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald, was born at St. Raphael, in the County of Glengarry, in 1812, to the Hon. William Hearst, the present Premier, who was born in the Township of Arran, in the County of Bruce, fifty-two years ago.

Very Few Sheep Now.

The other day I saw a flock of sheep grazing on the roadside, says a writer in the Toronto Globe. It was the first time I have witnessed such a sight in the present summer. Indeed I can recall seeing only two flocks all this season. It would, I believe, be easily possible to drive for days in parts of Ontario without seeing a single one of the animals with the golden hoof. It was different forty years ago. Then it was as unusual to find a farm without its sheep as it was to see a farmyard without a lot of hens. At that time every concession line was almost filled with dams and their lambs feeding by the roadways, and the roadways were clear of weeds. The sheep saw to that. It is not so now. Neither roadways nor farms are as free of weeds as they were when the wool-bearers were everywhere.

One of the greatest losses of Ontario agriculture is in the practical disappearance of sheep and the almost simultaneous lessening of the pea crop which furnished a large part of the rough winter feed for the animals. The crop enriched the land, and the sheep materially helped in keeping it clean.

Earning a Spanking.

A lady who had company to tea reproved her little son several times, speaking, however, very gently. At last, out of patience, she said sharply:

"Jimmy, if you don't keep still I'll send you away from the table!"

"Yes; that's what you always do when there's company and there are not enough cakes to go round!" was the reply of the gifted youth.—Pearson's Weekly.

Curious Old Lace.

Of all the curious kinds of lace, especially old lace, the most curious is that which is called point tresse. It is very rare and was made of human hair. French collectors say it exists in the present day only in their cabinets. It was confined to the early part of the sixteenth century.

"Present Blessings From Great War"

Rev. Chas. Geo. Smith, B.D., who has returned from his vacation, preached an interesting sermon in the Baptist Church last night on the above general theme, being the first in a series of five discourses intended to encourage Christians in this time of national crisis. The topic last night was: "The Collapse of Rationalistic Revelation and Ethical Salvation." The text was St. John iii:3—"Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Mr. Smith said in part:—

"Next Wednesday is the first anniversary of the greatest and most awful and devastating war since time began. And after twelve months of war we are all convinced that "war is hell," and that Milton's grim picture of its ravages is right:

> "Black it stood as night,
> Fierce as ten furies,
> Terrible as Hell,
> And shook a dreadful dart:
> So frown'd the mighty combatants
> That Hell grew darker at their > frown."

And yet I am sure there is not a Christian here but believes that Longfellow was right when he said: "War is a terrible trade; but in the cause that is righteous sweet is the smell of powder." A nation is not worthy of the name Christian, or of being preserved, and loved, if in the hour of its fate, it will not gather up all its jewels of manhood and life, and go down bravely into the conflict, however bloody and doubtful, resolved on a measureless ruin or a glorious victory.

So in this hour of crisis and in the face of our solemn anniversary next Wednesday our watchword should be "Sursum Cordia"—Lift up your hearts—for our redemption draweth night, and the Lord of Hosts is with us, and we have a righteous cause, and victory is as certain as the throne of God itself.

But there are certain moral and spiritual blessings even now coming to God's world, and to the Christian Church, and the redemption of mankind as a direct result of this terrible world-war. For forty years the Christian world has been shocked and staggered by the assertions of prominent professors who have boldly declared that all revelation is confined to the limits of human reason and finite understanding, and that whatever in the Bible runs contrary to human research and apprehension is contrary to rational revelation, and can be kicked out of doors and forgotten. These radical teachers, like Ritschl, Pfleiderer and Hegel declare that the Bible is only inspired as all books of history, philosophy and literature. They are all parallel and we are to study them by the light of the science of reason, and we are to expunge and tear to pieces whatever stultifies the human intellect or transcends the human mind. Now such teaching has repudiated and laughed at John iii, and Christ's teaching to Nicodemus—"Ye must be born from above," and it has laughed at our fathers' confession that the Bible is the sole and authoritative and complete Word of God, and it is paramount to all other great books, and is binding on the soul of man. Now in all this propaganda, Germany, with all her great universities, has taken the lead, and has set herself to teach the world, and this rational revelation is a witch's cauldron, a hotchpotch of truth and error, ethics, higher criticism and evolutional theories, and this criticism has been evolved and dreamed out over the beer mugs and amid the tobacco fumes in Berlin, Leipsic and Heidelberg universities. But today, thank God, men everywhere are coming to see that a religion without a Divine revelation produces a civilization devoid of integrity and the milk of human kindness. Such is the lesson Germany is teaching the world today. And men are returning to the old Book, and believing it as the very-word of God and the sheet-anchor of the Protestant faith. Again, these radical German professors have taught that salvation is only a life lived according to the light of our own environment. They declare that a good Hottentot and Fire-worshipper is as much a saved soul as a Christian. Of course they admit that the Hottentot's ethic is lower than the Christian's, but they say his salvation is just as sure. So this is the death-knell of evangelical religion, and missions wherever it is believed. But how is it today? Why, men who think and who have held this purely human view of salvation themselves because of this false teaching, have come to see, in an awful way, its evil results. For the nation that has been the champion of this purely ethical view of salvation, and has ignored the necessity of a change of heart, as taught by Jesus and His apostles and by the church through all the ages—this nation has carried on the most unethical and diabolical warfare the world has ever seen. By their fruits ye shall know them. So out of this cruel war will grow a true revival of Bible teaching and evangelical religion, and this will be a great accomplishment, even though it has come at the price of untold misery and suffering, and the death of thousands of noble soldiers.

THE STEAM ENGINE

Its History a Romance of Philosophy and Mechanics.

UNCLE SAM'S FINE EXHIBIT.

The National Museum at Washington Shows the First Crude Machines Made as Well as Originals and Models of the First Locomotives.

Probably no museum collection in the world better illustrates the development of the steam engine, particularly the locomotive, than the exhibit of the United States National museum, at Washington, which includes two of the earliest original locomotives and numerous models and accessories.

The history of the steam engine is a materialistic romance without parallel in the record of human achievements. It covers the stupendous and persistent efforts of many early philosophers and mechanics who found steam a mysterious uncontrollable force and left it a comprehensible controllable factor of public service.

No one knows how long after it was observed that by holding down the lid of a kettle of boiling liquid a certain force was created due to the compression of the steam, before any use was attempted with this newly discovered force. It is certain, however, that a sort of steam engine was exhibited in Alexandria, Egypt, about 200 years before our era began, and it was described in a work on pneumatics by Hero of Alexandria, written between 150 and 130 B. C. This machine was a rotary affair, more theoretical than practical, as were many of the results of philosophy in those days. A reconstruction of this engine in model form is in the museum exhibits.

Nothing more is to be found concerning the steam engine for centuries, a fact which is no doubt due to the lack of interest in anything which did not have to do with war or warlike implements. A book published in Rome in 1629 gives a description of Giovanni Branca's crude steam engine, showing it to have been an elementary steam turbine, with the sole defect that it lacked any appliances for making the steam follow the vanes, or buckets, of the revolving wheel, so that more of its energy might have been converted into useful work. One author in a treatise on locomotives claims that had some genius improved upon this early device the reciprocating engine would probably never have been invented, but that we would have had the advantage of our modern turbines much sooner.

The museum possesses a model of a very early machine designed by Sir Isaac Newton in 1680 which was propelled by a jet of steam projected backward against the air and a model of Denis Papin's invention of about the same time. The investigations of Savery and Papin and the successful experimental engines of Thomas Newcomen in 1705 with his piston and cylinder soon followed. Newcomen's ideas were improved by James Watt in 1769, who also introduced the high pressure engines, the condenser and later the double acting engine. The development of the engine was advanced by Cugnot, Evans, Hornblower and Murdoch. A model of the latter's engine is on display in the museum.

As the result of a wager made by a resident of Merthyr Tydfil, an important iron town of South Wales, that he could convey a load of iron nine miles by the power of steam alone Richard Trevithick made the first engine to run on rails in 1803 and won the wager for his employer the next year. Trevithick, it has been claimed, copied the stationary engine built in 1800 by Oliver Evans, an American, who was later ingenious enough to attach wheels to a scow and propel it by steam through the streets of Philadelphia in 1804. This curious creation, called the Oruktor Amphibolis, was the first motorcar to run on American soil.

A model of Trevithick's engine is to be seen in the National museum, as is also the model of the engine employed by John Stevens in 1825 and his original tubular boiler. Other models illustrate nearly all the types which began to put in their appearance soon after 1828, when the Stourbridge Lion was built in England and shipped to America, where it was the first engine to run on full sized rails. The museum possesses not only the model of this historic engine, but the original engine itself. The other original full sized locomotive to be seen in the museum is the John Bull, built by George Stephenson & Sons of England and shipped to America for use in 1831 on the Camden and Amboy railroad. It is interesting to recall that this old relic of early railroading in America made a round trip under its own steam in 1893 from New York to Chicago, where it was exhibited at the World's Columbian exposition.

Among the models of early and historic locomotives are George Stephenson's Rocket, which was built in 1829, the B. and O. engine Tom Thumb, built by Peter Cooper in 1829; the grasshopper type engine Arabian of 1831; the Best Friend, used in 1830-1; Baldwin's Old Ironsides, constructed in 1832; the Sandusky, built in 1837, and models of engines made by Asa Whitney in 1840 and G. A. Nichols in 1848. Besides the two locomotives and the numerous engine models, there are in the exhibit coach and car models, sections of rails, spikes, wheels and models and parts of valves, pistons and other early accessories pertaining to locomotives and railroads.

British Retake Lost Trenches

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The following official communication was issued to-night:—

"Further fighting on July 30, after the first German attack on our trenches near Hooge, reported in our communication of that date, resulted in the recapture by us of a portion of the lost trenches west of the village.

"Yesterday's action was chiefly confined to the artillery, but last night we successfully repulsed two further infantry attacks.

"There has been no infantry action to-day."

MODERN BAYONETS.

Rigid Tests They Must Pass Before They Go Into Service.

Any soldier will tell you that nothing in his equipment wears better than his bayonet, for this few inches of steel seldom snaps or loses its shape however great the strain imposed upon it. This is because the modern bayonet has to pass through twenty-three severe tests before it is considered fit to be attached to a soldier's gun. A bayonet blade is forged from the finest steel, and the first stage of its manufacture consists of heating it until red hot, when it is placed under a hammer which deals 1,500 blows a minute. This process results in the original piece of steel being hammered out to twice its length. The bar is then heated again and rolled between two huge iron cylinders, which press it into the rough shape of a blade. Emery wheels then grind its edges until they are as sharp as a razor.

Altogether the bayonet passes through 200 processes before it is ready for the testing room.

The first test applied to the polished blade is the "striking" test. A steel arm grips the bayonet and with great force drives it against a solid piece of wood. A badly produced blade snaps like a needle, but a good piece of steel emerges from this severe test with its edges straight and unblunted.

Then comes the bending test. The point of the bayonet is firmly gripped in a vice, and it is bent and twisted into part of a circle. If it survives this ordeal the blade is placed straight up under a heavy weight attached to a lever. The steel is bent beneath the weight, and, to pass this test it must lift up the mass of iron by its own elasticity.

However badly bent, a good bayonet should spring back perfectly straight, and it is tested for this quality before leaving the factory. The blade is placed on a curved block, the point being secured in a hole. The bayonet is then bent to the curvature of the block, and when released it must spring back to its original straightness to satisfy the rigid ruling of the inspector. Altogether a bayonet has to pass twenty-three tests with regard to its accuracy and strength.—London Answers.

CURIOUS FERRYBOATS.

Crossing the River at Simla Is a Comical Performance.

Perhaps the most curious ferryboat to be found in the world is at Simla. The river that flows to the northeast of Suni, the chief town of the Simla hill states, has few bridges, so, necessity being the mother of invention, a novel method has been adopted.

The skin of a buffalo is inflated with air and is placed, with the four feet upward, to float in the water. The owner then throws himself over it and the one or two passengers sit or lean on the top of him. By means of a small paddle in his right hand and the movement to and fro of his legs in the water the owner takes his passengers across.

The journey takes from three to five minutes, and the modest sum of a pice (one-half cent) is charged. It is only by repeated crossings in a day that a man can earn much, but so many natives use this means of going to and from their villages that the trade is not unremunerative.

Few things are more comical than these mussacks, whether moving in midstream or being carried back to the village at night on the owner's back. They are, of course, very light and are about two and a half yards long.

They seem to be safe, except in monsoon weather, when heavy rain has caused a rapid current, but at such a time two mussacks are often linked together, so that, being heavier, they can avoid the rocks.—London Strand Magazine.

Meeting the old man one day when the wind was blowing a gale, Lord Charles said to him, "It's a fine, calm day today."

RECRUITING CONDITIONS TO BE RELAXED

OTTAWA, Ont., July 31.—An important relaxation in the regulation regarding the qualification of recruits offered for service in Canada has been agreed upon by the Militia Council as follows:

First—A change in the height requirements from 5 feet 4 for infantry to 5 feet 2 and from 5 feet 6 for artillery to 5 feet 4.

Second—A relaxation of the regulation regarding chest measurement the minimum to be 33 inches. For instance a young man, in otherwise fit condition may naturally be expected to increase his chest measurement with outdoor life and exercise, while with an older man this is not so likely.

Third—In the future there will only be one medical examination and that at the place of recruiting.

Fourth—Men suffering from bad teeth, if otherwise fit medically, will have their teeth fixed or be supplied with new sets. The dental corps will do this work at the expense of the Government.

Fifth—Slight, physical defects which may be removed by minor operation, will not debar a man from enlistment. In such cases the men so suffering will be turned over to the Army Medical Service for treatment.

It is estimated that in the past more than 15,000 men failed to secure a place in the forces because of regulations which have now been relaxed.

D. A. Thomas, representative of Lloyd George, British Minister of Munitions, accompanied by R. D. Carr, and General Mahon left this morning for Montreal, where they will join General Bertram and proceed on a tour of inspection of munition factories in Montreal and go to Quebec to the Ross Rifle Factory.

SAYING A FEW WORDS.

When Your Turn Comes Remember That Short Speeches Never Bore.

If you are called upon to say a few words after dinner or at a meeting, don't be backward. Get right up and go at it.

The chances are that what you say on such an occasion, without preparation, will be of no importance and probably wouldn't have been of importance if it had been prepared in advance, but that isn't the point.

The point is that the minds of your hearers will be quite as blank and amorphous as your own, and consequently the few who actually listen to you will have no means of judging whether what you say is rational or not. The majority, out of politeness, will assume that you did well, or if they do not wish to commit themselves too irretrievably they will say you did well "under the circumstances."

The whole secret in "saying a few words" lies in making it "few." If you go on and on and on, your audience will not heed or remember a thing you said. They will only remember that you talked long enough to bore them. Short speeches never bore.—E. O. J. in Life.

The Exercise of Choice.

The human faculties of perception, judgment, discriminative feeling, mental activity, and even moral preference, are exercised only in making a choice. He who does anything because it is the custom makes no choice. He gains no practice either in discerning or desiring what is best. The mental and moral, like the muscular powers, are improved only by being used. The faculties are called into no exercise by doing a thing merely because others do it, no more than by believing a thing only because others believe it. * * *

He who lets the world, or his own portion of it, choose his plan of life for him has no need of any other faculty than the apelike one of imitation. He who chooses his plan for himself employs all his faculties.—John Stuart Mill.

Names Usurped by Women.

Mary is not by any means the only name that has been borne by men and women alike, writes a correspondent of the London Chronicle, who has dipped into old parish and other registers. Sir Patience Ward was lord mayor of London in 1680, Eve Sliffhton is mentioned in a will of the sixteenth century, and Grace Hardwin was an old landowner in America.

As to male names usurped by the ladies, instances occur of feminine Philips and Georges, and in one case a daughter was duly baptized Noah. A goddaughter of the Duke of Wellington was named Arthur in his honor, and in Effingham church there is a monument to Timothy, wife of Richard Mabanks.

RECRUITING CAMPAIGN GOING STRONG IN CITY

Successful Meeting Last Night in Ann St. School—Mr. James Roy Offers a Machine Gun to Daughters of Empire

The Samson Ward recruiting meeting was well attended last night, the side-lawn of Queen Alexandra School being packed by interested and patriotic citizens. At eight o'clock the local recruits marched on to the grounds preceded by the 15th Regiment Band, and followed by a representation of the school cadets. Seats were arranged conveniently for the listeners, and every one was occupied; indeed, an equal number to those sitting stood. The meeting passed off in a very successful manner, and was one to encourage the promoters of the league. Mr. J. A. Kerr acted as chairman in a capable manner.

Mr. Kerr, in his opening remarks, said the British Empire has been at war one year. The freedom of a liberty-loving people hangs in the balance. The aim of the speakers of the evening was to enlighten us as to our needs and how to protect ourselves.

Mrs. Wilmot gave in a splendid manner the patriotic song, "Men of Harlech," following which the Band played "Rule Britannia," and was heartily applauded.

MR. J. J. B. FLINT.

Mr. J. J. B. Flint, the first speaker, said he was certain the people of Samson Ward and other citizens must be delighted at the audience there. There has always been a strange apathy noticed in our young men, but we know our young Canadians well enough to state that they only need awakening to flock to protect the flag that "has braved for a thousand years the battle and the breeze." Civilization had extended nearly to the ends of the earth and art, education, wealth—we had all, and were exceedingly happy. We saw foreigners come into our prairies and forests and in return we got the uses of electricity and machinery. All was happy; then, like a bolt from the blue, came this dreadful turmoil. In all ancient history there is nothing to equal this war. About fifteen years ago, at a banquet in England, the toast to Canada was given, responded to by Col. Otter. He said that when the time came Canada would give her life's blood for the Empire.

"And the time is now," said the speaker. Then to remember that that monster, the Kaiser, a nephew of the incomparable Queen Victoria, under the pretence of a visit, went off to England and acted the part of a spy. He was toasted as the greatest monarch in Europe and taken to look through our powder plants, arsenals, and to inspect the navy. It has taken Germany twenty years to ascend to a height of book-learning philosophy that no other nation has reached. Then was turned out the finished article—Germany of today.

"Now let me tell you, without pessimism, that you have underestimated the power of the Germanic allies. We heard of hundreds of thousands of Austrians killed or captured and believed that soon the allied armies would be marching into Vienna and Berlin, but we found the statements were erroneous." Belgium and Northern France, said Mr. Flint, might be likened unto the Garden of Eden, but they had been turned into a manufacturing territory for the Germans, forced by bayonet and fire. That is what keeps the Germans supplied with their immense supplies of munitions. Russia could not get munitions, and she had to fight Germany, Austria, and finally Turkey, on a front of 1,500 miles, with a scarcity of munitions. That is why they have had to retire today. But give her twelve millions a chance; the retreat is only for today. When the Dardanelles are forced, Russia will be able to get her supplies. But meanwhile the millions of Austrians and Germans will be released and will be hurled against Calais—and why Calais? As a base of attack against England. Sir John French and his heroes are holding them in check for the present. "We need men, shells, guns and machine guns," said the speaker. "The Germans have two to our one of the latter. Ypres proved that we need munitions, and now Lloyd George has taken hold in a capable manner, and as soon as we get munitions and the men to use them, we will drive these devils back, out of France, out of Belgium, to where they belong." (Applause).

"Oh, young men of Belleville, wake up! Think what is in store for your mothers, your sisters, your sweethearts, your wives and daughters. Germany did not hate Belgium, did not hate France, and did not hate Russia, but look what they have done to those countries! But they do hate us, with a venomous hatred, so what would it be for the English? Come, young men of Belleville, put your name on the recruiting lists to fight for God, for our hearths and for our homes."

RETURNED FROM THE FRONT.

Lieut. Harold Wilkins, who was wounded at the front and has just been invalided home, was called upon to address the meeting. He met with a hearty reception, the male members of the audience singing "For he's a jolly good fellow." With the usual modesty of soldiers Lieut. Wilkins had very little to say. "I have been out there," he remarked, "and seen a bit of it. When I came back to England, in London and other towns I saw posters which said 'Every recruit hastens the end of the war.' I firmly believe in that and I think the logical conclusion is to join at once. It will be a gain in the end." He added that he had not come prepared to make a speech.

MR. GUSS PORTER.

Mr. Guss Porter, M.P., made a pointed and patriotic speech. "It is a sad reflection," he said, "that all our happiness, all the rights we enjoy, our very liberty, our right to live, our homes, our country are all in jeopardy

Mysterious Blaze Destroys a Church

Sacred Edifice at Glen Robertson Ontario, May Have Been Dynamited

ALEXANDRIA, Ont., August 2—The church of Notre Dame de Tours, the parish church at Glen Robertson, in Glengarry County, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. Considerable mystery surrounds the burning of the sacred edifice. Shortly after one o'clock in the afternoon dwellers in the neighborhood were startled by an explosion which shook their homes and the sight of volunes of smoke issuing from the church. An alarm was rung in and the residents turned out to fight the flames. The brigade from Alexandria also was summoned to the scene but arrived too late to save the church itself and confined their efforts to saving the presbytery adjoining. This they succeeded in doing.

The pastor, when interviewed, said the fire to him, was a mystery, as he had personally made a thorough inspection of the premises scarcely an hour before and everything then was in perfect order. A number of suspicious characters had been seen in Glen Robertson for a day or two previous to the conflagration, but these promptly disappeared yesterday leaving no trace as to their destinations.

It will be recalled that not long ago an attempt was made to dynamite the parish church at Embrun, Ont., and it would seem that a campaign of destruction has been inaugurated. The general feeling in this vicinity is that the matter should be investigated and no effort spared to locate the person or persons responsible for these outrages.

Ibernia Will Not Alter Situation

CORNISH, N.H., August 1.—President Wilson to-day received from the State Department official despatches telling of the sinking of the Leyland line steamer Ibernia by a German submarine. The despatches were to the effect that the steamer had disregarded a warning to stop. There was no indication here that the President regarded the incident as being one likely to cause further complications with Germany. He refused to make any comment.

SEVEN OFFICERS OUT OF 42

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 2.—Recent word from the front states that Capt. Harry E. Hodge, who is in command of a machine gun section of the 2nd Battalion, has again been mentioned in despatches for conspicuous bravery. Letters received here say that Capt. Hodge had the arch of his foot broken by the kick of a horse. He applied for eight days' leave of absence, but was refused, as his work was necessary in the trenches at the time. He stated that only seven of the 42 officers of the original battalion were left. They are: Col. Watson, O.C., Capt. Turner, Capt. Hodge, on the staff, and four others, of whom Lieut. O'Flynn of Belleville, and Lieut. Birdsall of Northumberland, are two.

French Repel Many Attacks

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 3.—Afternoon official statement). In Artois in the vicinity of Souchez there was spirited fighting during a part of last night, in which hand grenades and bombs were largely used. On the plateau of Quennevieres and in the valley of the Aisne yesterday saw rather violent artillery exchanges. Soissons was again bombarded.

In the Argonne, in the sectors of St. Hubert, Marie Therese, Fontaine aux Charmes, and at Hill 214 fighting continued throughout the night. The Germans endeavored to deliver several attacks, but were not successful. At Eparges there was yesterday rather severe bombardment.

In the Vosges the enemy yesterday evening delivered one attack against our positions on the River Linge and three attacks against our positions on Barrenkopf. These violent attacks were all repulsed.

Sir Robert Spends Time in Business

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Premier Borden today spent some time in the Canadian pay record office and later proceeded to Lady Languttock's residence, where a party of newly-arrived Canadian nurses are being entertained.

The premier, expressing his pleasure at meeting the ladies from the Dominion, said the empire would never forget the noble part women had played in the war.

German Army Ten Millions

LONDON, Aug. 2.—At today's session of the meat cargo cases before a British Prize Court, Sir Frederick E. Smith, the Solicitor-General, produced a sworn affidavit made by Major Eric Dillon, a member of the General Staff, giving a British estimate, which, he says, is approximately correct, showing that the number of persons serving in the German army and under the control of German military authority aggregates 10,000,000.

British Gain In Gallipoli

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The crest of the Ridge in Gallipoli has been gained by British troops, and the position of the British in the Dardanelles has been improved, according to a statement given out today by the official press bureau.

NORONIC STILL FAST

Tugs Fail to Bridge Lake Steamer an Inch

WINDSOR, Ont., August 1.—At a late hour to-day the Northern Navigation Company's passenger steamer Noronic was still fast aground on a sand bank in the Detroit River off the head of Belle Isle, where she grounded during a fog at 4 o'clock Saturday morning. Some 40 passengers all Sarnians were landed safely to-day, however, and it is expected that the boat will be in good shape to continue her trips up the lakes.

The steamer is on the mud bank past the midship line, with her bow far above the water line and her stern well sunk. Persistent pulling by tugs dispatched to the scene have so far failed to budge the steamer an inch. The entire cargo of the steamer has been removed and it may be necessary to dredge beneath her to secure her release.

Steamer Beached After Collision

Bengore Head Badly Damaged in a Crash With Collier in River

QUEBEC, Aug. 2.—The freight boat Benfore Head, of the Head Line, is ashore off Hare Island, 81 miles below Quebec as the result of a collision with the collier Batiscan during a dense fog early this morning. Following the collision the Bengore Head was beached immediately, as she was making considerable water in hold No. 2. The Batiscan, although damaged about the bow, was able to proceed on her course. She passed up en route to Montreal this afternoon, and, as is customary, changed pilots here.

Early this afternoon the wrecking steamer Lord Strathcona was requisitioned, and she left at 4 p.m. with the schooner G.T.D. and all the equipment such as pumps, etc., necessary for the refloating of the stranded vessel. The firm of Kenney & Boisvert sent gang of fifty men to the scene of the wreck on board the Lord Strathcona. The tug Bell is also at Hare Island now assisting with lighters in the salvage work, having left here late last night.

The Bengore Head was beached because she took water fast after the collision, and further the bank where she is resting will, it is pointed out, facilitate the work of taking off the cargo of timber.

The Batiscan was in charge of Pilot Lachane, while Pilot Raymond was at the wheel of the steamer Bengore Head.

ITALIANS CAPTURE AUSTRIAN DEFENCES

ROME, Aug. 2.—Prisoners taken by the Italian forces now number 17,000, including 380 officers, according to an announcement made by the Stefani news agency. Prisoners come from all parts of Austria-Hungary. While under the surveillance of Italian troops, they are under the direct command of their own superiors. Their rations are the same as those served to the Italian soldiers.

YOUNG ITALIANS SENT HOME

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The Chronicle has the following from the Lugano: The Italian volunteer corps is in deep distress as a result of a recent Government order. The trouble arises from a new rule that no volunteer is to be accepted under the age of 18. All those who have enlisted below this age are to be sent home. When the order was made known, youths of 16 and 17 serving in the ranks were told to give up their arms and uniforms and return home. The disappointment was too much for the feelings of the newly-made soldiers. When the time for parting came many boys broke down and wept.

MILAN, Aug. 2.—The first line of Austrian defence in Carso having been taken and the Italian front advanced over a considerable distance of the most difficult country east of Monfalcone and Sagrado the second line of Austrian fortifications hastily erected from Rubbia to Pietro Rossa, on the eastern slopes of the Vallone depression, are now to be carried. The Italian army is fully equal to its new task. The attack of the Austrians' second line has already begun with success.

Many Officers Taken.

The Italian artillery has been brought forward rapidly and is bombarding the new Austrian trenches. The infantry has maintained a steady pressure on the retreating Austrians, and each day is marked by the capture of a number of prisoners and considerable booty. The number of officers taken prisoners continues exceptionally high, compared to the number of men. Various explanations are offered, but the real one, from the prisoners' own statements, seems to be that the terrible effect of the Italian artillery or the Austrians when attacking or compelled to retreat so demoralizes the men that they are panic-stricken and abandon the officers. The latter, completely helpless because of the murderous fire, fall into the hands of the Italian infantry, which by rapid forward dashes takes them by surprise.

BRITISH STEAMER SUNK

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The British steamer Ranza, 2300 tons, has been sunk, and the captain and eleven of the crew of twenty-four landed safely. The Admiralty is no longer announcing in what waters or through which agency these shipping disasters are brought about.

BRITISH SUBMARINES DO SPLENDID WORK

German Destroyer Sunk— Steamers and Gunboat Destroyed —Galata Bridge Reported Blown up—Military Railway Blocked By Bombardment

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The British Admiralty to-night announced that a British submarine had returned and reported the sinking of a German torpedo-boat destroyer, believed to be of the G-196 class, on July 26, near the German coast.

The German destroyer G-196 was completed in 1911. The vessel displaced 689 tons and was capable of travelling as a speed of more than 32 knots an hour. She was fitted with two 24-pounders and three torpedo ubes. Her complement in normal times was 73 officers and men.

Turk. Steamers Torpedoed.

Another statement issued by the Admiralty this evening says:

"The Vice-Admiral commanding in the eastern Mediterranean reports that one of the British submarines operating in the Sea of Marmora has torpedoed a large steamer of three thousand tons off the Mudania pier which had several vessels secured alongside. The explosion was very heavy. A small steamer close to Karabigha Bay was torpedoed.

"A report from Constantinople states that a gunboat was torpedoed in the Sea of Marmora, about this time and it possibly refers to this occasion.

Torpedoes were fired at lighters alongside the arsenal at Constantinople. The result could not be seen, but the explosion was heavy.

"The Zeitunlik powder mills were fired at, but owing to the darkness the result could not be ascertained.

Blow Up Ammunition

"The railway cut, one mile west of Jara Burnu, was bombarded and the line blocked temporarily, so that a troop train was unable to pass. It was being fired at as it steamed back, three truckloads of ammunition being blown up."

Mudania, Karabigha and Jara Burnu are all on the Asiatic shore of the Sea of Marmor, the former bout 100 miles est of the northern entrance of the Dardanelles, and Karabigha and Jara Burnu about 25 miles east of it.

A despatch to The Times from Mitylene says it is reported from Dedegatch that the Galata bridge across the Golden Horn at Constantinople has been blown up by a submarine.

Sink German Transport.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 2.—An official communication issued here tonight says that a British submarine has sunk a large German transport in the Baltic Sea.

French Sink Two Ships

ATHENS, Aug. 2.—It is learned from Mudros, the allies' Near Eastern base, that a French submarine has returned there after sinking two transports in the Sea of Marmora, one opposite Top-Kanch Arsenal in Constantinople and the other in Mandarin Bay. The torpedoing of a ship just off Constantinople threw the whole city into a spasm of terror.

WARSAW SITUATION REMAINS UNCHANGED

No Foundation for Rumor That Russians are Dissatisfied With England and France

LONDON, Aug. 2.—While the Austro-Germans continue to tighten the wings of their great eastern battlefront, with success at both extremities, including the occupation of Mitau reported officially by Berlin today and two weeks ago in the north and further progress beyond Cholm in southeast Poland, the situation before Warsaw proper remains unchanged and obscure.

Few additional details have reached London concerning the plans for the abandonment of the city, but apparently the time has not arrived for the Russians to relinquish their hold on the capital, or, at least, no word of its evacuation has come to London.

Ivangorod, southeast of Warsaw heretofore erroneously reported invested by Berlin, is now nearing that state in fact, according to the Berlin announcement, but from Ivangorod eastward to Cholm, and beyond, the Russians who abandoned the railway are fighting desperately in an endeavor to hold up Field Marshal Von Mackensen's advance northward into Poland, a movement which threatens the Russian centre retiring from Warsaw.

Pronouncements in the duma at Petrograd and by the Russian ambassador at London indicate that Russia and England are anxious to brand as unfounded the recurrent reports that the Russian people are disgruntled at the showing Great Britain and France have made in the west, which might create a situation unfavorable to the continued unity of the allies.

No hint of a separate peace or of dissatisfaction with England's policy comes from any authoritative source and Count Benckendorff made it plain that, while there may have been some sentimental popular feeling in his country for a diversion in the west to relieve the strain in Russia, there had been no criticism emanating from those who understood the military situation.

Canadian Home For Pres. Wilson

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Aug. 2—(Special)—The proposal to purchase Hart Island, opposite Alexandria Bay, in the Thousand Islands, to be used as a summer home for President Wilson, suits the owner of the island, G. C. Boldt, who will accept $500,000 for the property, on which is located a magnificent home.

WOMAN LITERALLY BURNED TO DEATH

Distressing Accident to a City Resident—Clothing Burned off and Body Roasted—Death Resulted Shortly After the Occurrence

A most distressing occurrence took place yesterday afternoon on the eastern line of Belleville limits, which resulted in the death of Mrs. John Wesley Evans, a woman of 55 years of age.

It appears that papering was going on in the house and the discarded paper taken off the room was conveyed outdoors for the purpose of being burned up. Mrs. Evans desired to burn the paper up and in order to do so poured a quantity of coal oil over the paper.

Whilst no person was the actual witness of the affair, it is generally believed that the clothing of the unfortunate woman was ignited and in an instant was a mass of flames. Her screams for help attracted the attention of those in the house, who rushed to her ssistance. By this time the clothing was virtually burned off her and she was terribly burned about the body. The ambulance was called and as quickly as possible Mrs. Evans was rushed to the hospital, where every effort was made to relieve her suffering. An hour later the victim passed away, as the result of the injuries she had sustained. Mrs. Evans was terribly burned from the sole of her feet to her head and no doubt suffered untold agony. The remains were subsequently taken to Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment and prepared for burial.

Deceased was in her 55th year and was born in England. She had resided in this city for some time and was much respected by all who knew her. She was a member of the Anglican Church. In addition to the husband, a family of two sons and two daughters survive. The sons are John of this city, and Henry, who is a member of the 4th overseas contingent. The daughters are Mrs. Wilkins of this city and Mrs. Lane of Toronto.

at this moment." The condition was there, he added, and they had to face it. Were they to acquit themselves as men, or were they to acknowledge themselves the slaves of the vilest and greatest tyrant the world had ever seen? They were free men—born free—and it was up to them to preserve that freedom. "It has been felt that the young men of this city have not responded to their duty with that alacrity and in such numbers as might reasonably be expected from the young men of Belleville. That is true. While we honor to the greatest extent the young men who have gone forth to fight our battles, we must not forget the fact that there does exist a certain apathy among the young men. That apathy is traceable to different reasons and causes. I don't think the importance and necessity of the occasion has been impressed upon the young men so as to convince them that their service is a necessity. The young men up till now have never been told that they had occasion to defend their homes; they have never had occasion to think anything but that their rights and privileges as British subjects would ever be maintained to them. Some of those young men who have realised the position in which their country is placed have been restrained from taking the step they would willingly have taken by other and superior forces.

"I refer particularly to the ladies of this city. Far be it from me to say one word of disparagement of the work the ladies have done. The ladies exercise a great influence upon males. I do not fail to recognise what a terrible sacrifice it is for a fond mother to part with perhaps her only son. The sacrifice is great; but the greater the sacrifice the greater the honor. Never was there a woman who would have the finger of scorn pointed at her and to have it said 'She cuddled a coward.' Rather would she have it said, 'She mothered a man.' I do not believe it will be said of the women of this city that they failed to do their duty. The responsibility is upon you, and great as is the responsibility I am sure it will be discharged with honor to yourselves."

Mr. Porter went on to say that young men who had not taken the responsibilities of a family or formed business associations from which it was difficult to break, should enlist. The future belonged to the young men. While they were fighting for all they would still be fighting for themselves. He explained that it was impossible for himself to go to the front, for physical and other reasons; and urged young men if they thought it reasonable, just and right to enlist, and so show their manhood. They should not delay one single day.

MR. F. E. O'FLYNN.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn gave an address which was well received. It was a stirring appeal for enlistment and was given in a manner which demonstrated the earnestness of the speaker. In his opening remarks he referred to the pleasure it gave him to see so many present, evidencing the interest the residents of Samson Ward took in this matter. There was, however, in Belleville a strange kind of apathy that was difficult to understand. This ought not to be the case. We should take heart and be true to womanhood and manhood. In this matter we must work and be united. Who is there among us who desires the liberties and freedom we enjoy taken away? Not one. He was convinced all would rather die than submit to such a state of affairs. We must wake up this country in regard to enlistment. He was somewhat afraid that all did not appreciate our present position and the position of the British Empire at the present time. We are not slaves and never would be, but are we not in a time of crisis? He felt very strongly upon this matter. All young men who could possibly do so should enlist as a unit. All should encourage the young men to enlist now and go to the front to fight if need be for the dearest country in the world. "The liberties we now enjoy will go down if we do not all do our duty. Some possibly fail to do their duty because they do not realize the gravity of the situation. The need of enlisting has not gripped our hearts as it should have done. We have got to send out our, boys. Husbands, sons brothers must be given up, and the ladies can do much in this matter."

He loved the city of Belleville, also the boys and girls of the city, and he would appeal to them to stand true to the city and this cause. We had to do our duty, and when we do it we can beat the Germans. (Applause) If we do our best he was certain God would crown our efforts. "Wake up, young men, in the defence of our land, our flag, our King and liberty. Let it not be said that Canada is behind in this regard. Look upon it as your duty and let no influence keep you from doing your duty."

The speaker, at this stage of his remarks, read a poem entitled "When You Call All Hands." In concluding his remarks Mr. O'Flynn said the call has come. Give of our means, give our men and our guns. Canadians on the firing line had done and were doing their duty, and Belleville boys were doing their bit. Let us all do our part as loyal Canadians and be true to our country and beloved King. (Loud applause.)

COL. KETCHESON.

Col. Ketcheson wished to know where the young man was who could stand still and hear of their former comrades lying in German prisons. At the beginning of the war he had volunteered the services of himself, his men and officers, and they were standing behind him. Most of his men came from the country, while they should come from the cities. The women could do more towards recruiting than anyone else. They should not stand in the way of their husbands, brothers and sons enlisting. If they went to the front and were killed, they died in a noble cause, and if they returned, they would be laden with honors and blessings.

To The Editor Intelligencer.

Sir:—In your otherwise excellent report of the recruiting gathering at the High School, in your issue of Saturday, you credit me with the following statement: "We are fighting not for any country in particular, but for freedom and liberty" I spoke rapidly and possibly indistinctly What I intended to emphasize was the very reverse, namely, that we are now fighting for our own country in particular, and therefore for freedom and liberty. But certainly, and with as stern a reality as ever in history, we are fighting for altars and firesides, for Canadian hearths and homes.

Read Rudyard Kipling's wonderful address delivered to 10,000 Britons, and now published and circulated north, south, east and west, to 10,000,000. "The world is divided into just two classes, human beings—and Germans." Every atrocity and every abomination and every sacrilege that has been perpetrated in Belgium and France will be repeated in the Motherland and in Canada, if the Teuton gains the ascendancy, and dictates terms of peace, through force and frightfulness,

One word more. It seems to me that our present united campaign should be first—for living, manly, fighting men, and secondly—for all philanthropic work of the Red Cross, and now more particularly for the caring for the wounded and disabled returning to Canada from the far-flung field of battle, either to recuperate for the firing line again, or to eke out a livelihood as best they can. Why should money be diverted from these recognized channels of life saving and of practical relief to supply the necessary equipment of Machine Guns, an administrative and Government duty to which all should contribute by necessity and general taxation rather than through the spontaneous generosity of a few. Surely the need being now understood our responsible Government will supply that need, without making it dependent upon benificent and private subscriptions.

All honor to the splendid initiative of the Quinte Daughters of the Empire, who have led the way, and to the generous citizens who have responded to their call in such a royal manner. The Government can through this now read the pulse of the people.

Cobourg is almost the only town in Canada that has risen to the occasion of welcoming back in fitting form those who have offered their lives for Canada and have faced their destiny in the field. The wounded and disabled are the honored creditors of the nation, and Canada will need the services of those experienced Veterans more and more before the advancing tide of Germany's mighty power recedes from the frontier lines, which she has so ruthlessly violated.

Yours,
W. K. PONTON.

PATRIOTIC AND GENEROUS OFFER

Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C. M.P., read an offer of a machine gun by Mr. Jas. A. Roy of this city, which greatly stirred the audience. In a letter addressed to Mrs. E. Gus. Porter, as Regent of Quinte Chapter, I.O.D.E., he donated a complete machine gun at a cost of between $900 and $1000 for use of our boys at the front. The letter is as follows:

Aug. 3, 1915.

Mrs. E. Guss Porter,
Regent, Quinte Chapter I.O.D.E., City

Dear Madame—I have much pleasure through your Order to present to the War Department of Canada one complete Machine Gun for the defence of our Empire and our homes. I understand the cost will be about $900, and I will be pleased to hand you a cheque for the same when you advise me of the correct amount. Hoping this will encourage your Order's efforts.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES A. ROY."

Kaiser Sanctioned Lusitania Crime

Now Proved Guilty of Murder of Women and Children

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The Daily News today has the following: Edward Legge, whose books on King Edward VII, created some sensation, brings forward in his latest volume, "The Public and Private Life of Kaiser Wilhelm II." a remarkable piece of evidence as to the complicity of the Kaiser in the Lusitania crime. An American gentleman, he declares, "who has founded an organization for succoring our troops and those of our allies, was sending his son out to further his benevolent work. Having been long on intimate terms with the Emperor, he wrote to inform him that his son would be passing through Germany and expressed the hope that the young man would not be interfered with. By return post came a letter from the Kaiser in his own peculiar handwriting, imploring his friend not to allow his son to take passage to England on board the Lusitania. Ballin and Bernstorff may have suggested the commission of the crime but we have here the Kaiser's own admission that he knew all about it, and sanctioned it."

CHARM OF ICELAND.

A Land of Wild Grandeur and Mighty and Beautiful Waterfalls.

In spite of its poverty Iceland is one of the most beautiful countries of the world. The scenery combines a wild grandeur, with ingratiating charm in an infinite variety of characteristic landscapes.

The mountain formations are majestic and powerful in outline, showing traces of the volcanic forces which are still active in some places. The large cupola shaped mountains, which rise like oriental temples from the ocean or the level plains, their tops covered with perpetual snow, are very impressive.

To this must be added a wealth of mighty and beautiful waterfalls, great lakes, steaming springs and craters still warm. The view is usually wide and open and the play of colors fascinating, especially in the fair, mild summer nights. The air is clear, healthy and invigorating, streaming alternately from the wide sea and from the snow covered mountains.

This natural beauty attracts many tourists to the country, and large ocean steamers, filled with travelers, visit it several times each summer. Owing to the lack of transportation facilities most of them must be content with seeing the coasts. When it gets railroads, modern hotels and other conveniences Iceland will no doubt become a popular tourist country.

Iceland has many possibilities for a fair future.—American Scandinavian Review.

Thackeray and the Eggs.

"Americans," says a writer in the London Chronicle, "have a way of serving boiled eggs which is apt to disconcert the English visitor. It is told of Thackeray that at his first American breakfast in Boston he ordered this dish. Among the array of things placed before him was a goblet filled with something that he failed to recognize, and he also missed the eggs. In answer to his inquiry the waiter said, 'That's them in the glass.' 'Well, but where are the shells?' asked Thackeray. 'You didn't ask for the shells,' was the prompt reply."

Tit For Tat.

Plenty of Machine Guns in Use Now

The following is a letter received by Rev. A. Logan Geggie, of Toronto from a nephew, who is a sergeant-major in the British army in Flanders:

July 12th
(And what better day for a foight?)

This is written before the event. Exactly what the event is we are all guessing. Anyhow the event is ahead, and, by the time this reaches you, the event should be recorded history.

I have been puzzling my brains today to recall when and where my feelings were just as they are at this minute. Have you ever seen a military mess-tin—an ingenious affair in which one is sometimes called upon to cook one's dinner? Away, years ago, in the times of peace, at company training, the day's work included "dinner cooking." Each of us received approximately a pound of beef, a couple of "spuds," and an injunction to "eat that before 1.30." The sticks were wet and we were poor, poor cooks. Viewed as an operation, our culinary efforts must be written down as a dead failure. Towards 2.30 the captain being himself hungry said: "Oh, color-sergeant, for heaven's sake, stop this damned nonsense at once and get the company fallen in." Water, which by 5 p.m. would have been soup, was poured from the mess-tin and the rest of the dinner, a pound of beef (approximately) and a couple of spuds, returned with me to the barracks. Three weeks later we were hastily called out in marching order, to undergo a surprise inspection by a general with a peppery reputation. Three files below me I heard the great man ask a chap to produce his mess-tin and open it. Then, then, then I remembered that dinner. It was still there in the mess-tin. That recollection sticks.

Feelings Before Action.

Am I in a similar state of mind now? Hardly, because that was sheer terror, blue funk. This isn't. I get nearer to-day's feelings by recalling that once at school I had a difference with another boy. It was, I believe, my first fight and never have I forgotten what I felt on seeing the grim, cold-blooded way he rolled his sleeves up. Once into it, I rattled him (met him years after on a ship returning from South Africa), but I've never forgotten how he rolled up his sleeves. Just now we are, and they are, rolling up sleeves I don't know why I should go to all this length just to tell you there's a "scrap" coming off. Anyhow you have here some idea of the feeling: "Just before the battle, mother." Now, you ask, how do we know? Are we told? No. But when you see Royal Engineer Signal Officers carefully duplicating and triplicating telephone wires—look out. When the Divisional General begins to take an unusual interest in the working of the field ambulance—hello. When a monoplane makes a hasty descent in an unaccustomed spot, and from the cabin there staggers a badly wounded observer, who, just before his utter collapse is able to say "Wire to B——. Tell them seven or eight divisions are on the roads leading from C——" Hell. Oh, there are heaps of signs.

Another Sign of Activity.

Yesterday odd shells were dropped along fully six miles of our front trenches. Why? It is because the Germans think this is as good a way as any of spending a pleasant Sunday afternoon? No, dear man, new batteries are coming into action, and are checking the range. Almost you can imagine an apology accompanying each Jack Johnson—"Sorry, old chap to disturb you, I really don't intend to hurt anybody, but I simply must know exactly how many hundred yards you are distant." So the report from front to rear is laconic, though ominous, "Guns registering on Trench 26."

About this time we should all be making our wills. But, somehow, we aren't. Some of us are playing melodeons. The fiend I spoke of in my last letter has now accomplished the first four bars of "Annie Laurie." I hate the idea that some day he may aim as high as 'rag-time." I have a distinct suspicion that at the end of 24 trench there is a gambling school (ha'penny nap). But it is quiet (except for that accursed melodeon). Somewhere away far down, on our right the game of "guns registering" is going on. I borrow a description of somebody's else's when I say it is for all the world like the fast bowler at cricket who chucks down a few preliminary balls by way of stretching his muscles. But here it is quiet today. Tomorrow—who knows?

But let me tell you this. Let me just for once enter the dangerous grounds of prediction. The Boche is in for the worst soaking he has ever had. No Calais for him—not even Ypres. We held him off in October, and we're going to hold him again. But this is too much like boasting.

One Letter Took Only 18 Days

It is fashionable to rail at the censor these days. Man, I have read cause for a "grouch." Yesterday there arrived from you two letters (one contained another braw 'hanky'). The letters were dated June 25th (good going, rather). To-day there arrived another from you dated Empire Day, May 24th. You will understand that at this minute I have no charitable instincts concerning censors.

I'll tell you a story of a snob, or a prig, or something like that. He is an officer (just the exception which proves the rule), and part of his duty was to read the Tommies' letters to their people and see that "no information which is likely to assist—", etc. Any right-minded man would consider such a job distasteful and would preserve a strict silence regarding a fellow's family matters, treat them as though received under the seal of the confessional. Not so our prig. It used to "get my goat" to hear him trying to raise a cheap laugh over what Spud Tamson had to say to his girl. He was stopped, however, and how? One day he was called on to read an exact and cleverly-written description of himself. The "gift" that Rabbie Burns asked for was placed in his hands—and it cured him.

I stopped this letter about four hours ago—had to see to a job. It's done, so now I may resume. Wasn't it Carlyle who described a genius as one "with an infinite capacity for taking pains?" Our No. 26 trench melodeon player is a genius. He is still at it—"Wad lay me doon and dee." He has a bit of difficulty between the "and" and "dee." But he will get there—trust him. Can you blame me if my mind again reverts to refuse pits?

Germany Putting Up a Bluff

By the way, the most famous woman in Europe has again visited us, —Dame Rumor. This time she says that the Germans are putting up against us one big bluff. They are showing us the troops in daylight, and removing them at night. There is to be no push here. Well, we'll see. Man, Tommy Atkins, like a lot of other folks less interested, has become a tactician. Here is discussed the exact value of the neutrality of Holland. The war will end. Where? About 200 yards from where we are now. Why? The failure of next year's German crops. When? About April. Thus Tommy Atkins. You can optimise on him if you care to. Always remember he has seen the barbed wire—in front distantly, and in the rear critically.

And we have machine guns now. I won't tell you how many. I only ask you to multiply your estimate by three; and—and—oh, there's a lot of "ands." Anyhow, keep smiling.

Officers' Casualties "Rushed."

I want to put you right about a matter touched on in your Empire Day letter. In a Scotch paper you saw it stated that eleven of our officers were knocked out, and among the rank and file but two. You ask, is this the work of the snipers? No. It happens in this way. Officer casualties are immediately wired to the base to London and appear in the following day's paper. The others appear, sometimes, three weeks later, although the relatives of the killed are informed in a couple of days. The loss in officers you refer to occurred at Langemarck, or, to be geographically corect, at Pilkem, in which "dust-up" we lost 270 men. Some scrap that was, and one more lesson to us regarding the value of machine guns.

Have you ever come across this in any of the war writings, "Machine Guns Will Stop War"? That sentence may be original—I hope so. Anyhow, if I can squeeze through this and we come together again I want to tell you some tales about machine guns. Did you read General Ian Hamilton's despatch? 'Inventions of the Devil"! Now, Mr. Maxim, get up, don your horns, and bring an action for libel.

Drinking Water Rendered Immune From Typhoid by Montserrat

Most epidemics of Typhoid are traceable to impure water.

City people going to the country for the summer months or even for week ends, very often bring back Typhoid germs owing to vegetable decomposition in lake, river and well water.

The Bacteriologists at McGill University have proven that a small quantity of Montserrat Lime Juice will destroy Typhoid germs in water, in twenty minutes.

Typhoid can be prevented at home or at the country cottage by using Montserrat Lime Juice. It makes the water absolutely immune, besides providing a wholesome, cooling and thirst assuaging beverage.

Keep a pitcher of this healthy beverage in the ice box.

MONTSERRAT LIME JUICE is for sale at all druggists and grocers.

If a man and his job ar not congenial little is accomplished.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Fourteen non-coms. and men of No. 3 Company, C.A.S.C., left for Niagara on Saturday in charge of Lieut. Farthing. These men are intended for the front, and after a brief period of training will be sent to France.

Yesterday morning the 8th C.M.R. received 15 more horses. The horses were shipped from the remount depot in Toronto and are of a good cavalry type. This makes 390 horses in all for the use of the 8th and both men and officers are pleased with the addition.

It will be some time before the 8th C.M.R. will be able to undertake a route march to Belleville, as 250 of their horses are new, and not yet broken to their work or hardened to such a road task as a route march to Belleville and back. The Mayor of Belleville has written Lt.-Col. Munro assuring him that Belleville will be pleased to have the Mounted Rifles visit that city.

It is said that two new battalions will be organized at once in connection with the camp. One of the battalions, it is rumored will be given to the counties of Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, and the other to the counties west of these beginning with Hastings. One of these it is well understood will be commanded by Lt.-Col. Ketcheson, of Belleville, whose name was prominently mentioned in connection with the command of the 59th Battalion.

The most pathetic sight on the camps grounds yesterday was to see "Major" who was so strongly attached to the 38th Battalion, lying near the mound which marked the guard tent of the battalion during its stay in camp. "Major" lived with the guard of the 38th as he had formerly done with the 21st, and he would occasionally rise and hunt the tentless ground for the men who left for Bermuda, and with whom he had lived and marched for the past three months.—Kingston Standard.

MACHINE GUNS.

The first machine gun from Belleville has been offered by Mr. James A. Roy. The announcement was made last night, at an open-air recruiting meeting held at Ann Street School, a letter being read by Mr. E. Guss Porter, in which Mr. Roy placed at the immediate disposal of the Daughters of Empire a cheque for $900. This patriotic offer was accorded the hearty reception it deserved. It is one of many similar contributions which have been made from all parts of the Province since the urgent need of more machine guns was made known. It is a practical way of showing a man's patriotism. He cannot send men to the front, but he can provide the sinews of war in a practical manner. It has been found that the best method of counteracting the diabolical methods of warfare resorted to by the Germans is an adequate supply of artillery and machine guns.

The Canadian Government has determined that our soldiers will not be further handicapped in fighting the Huns. Lack of sufficient machine guns has proved disastrous, and four to each of our regiments against twenty in each of the German regiments is too great odds in favor of our enemies. In addition to what the Government is supplying, Hon. Senator Lougheed, acting Minister of Militia, called for contributions and there has been a generous response. Already contributions have been received which enable the Government to buy a thousand of them. In addition to the half million dollar gift from the Province of Ontario, there has been one gift of $40,000, two of $10,000 each and a great number of from $10 to $5,000. They are coming from provinces, cities, towns and villages, from lodges and societies, from manufacturers and business firms and from private individuals.

Senator Lougheed states that originally the allotment was four machine guns to an infantry brigade. This has been increased to eight guns to each battalion. This is the number which will be officially supplied. The private contributions will be in addition to these. It is calculated that enough guns will be subscribed to furnish them to all the Canadians who can be trained to operate them. The War Purchasing Commission has contracted for a continuous supply of this very necessary armament. The first supply will go to troops at the front, but at the instruction camps enough machine guns will be placed to thoroughly train hundreds in their use. Each regiment will have enough of these guns when it goes into action to guarantee that there will be no handicap through inferiority in number with the enemy.

The Quinte Chapter of Daughters of Empire is busily engaged in raising funds to purchase a machine gun. At the Firemen's Tournament the energetic young ladies who canvassed for subscriptions succeeded in raising over $200. Whether in the face of the official announcement that it is expected that sufficient guns will be forthcoming to meet all requirements, they will go on with their good work, since Mr. Roy's offer has been received, is a matter for consideration. Nine hundred dollars is a large sum to raise in small contributions. If they should decide to divert the money already collected to the Red Cross no one who has contributed would raise any objection. On the other hand, if they have made sufficient progress with their collection to encourage them to pursue their praiseworthy task so much the better. When women make up their minds to achieve a certain object they invariably succeed.

OUR DUTY TO THE BLIND.

From Vienna, from Paris and from Montreal come reports of arrangements that have been made for the assistance and instruction of soldiers blinded in the war. The French report states that a larger proportion of the combatants have been, and will be, made blind in this war than in any previous war, on account of the difference in the character of the fighting and in the weapons. Ontario has provided amply for the instruction of blind children, but has not been a leader in provision for ameliorating the condition of the adult blind. With the added claims of the soldiers who will come home from Europe sightless, action in this matter cannot be long delayed. Our blind soldiers and fellow citizens must not be left to wear out their lives in idleness and sorrow, when timely aid and proper instruction can enable them to resume their places as useful members of the community. The Ontario School for the Blind at Brantford is maintained for the education of children whose sight is so defective that they cannot be taught in the regular public schools. This School is not intended for adults, and it cannot do what is required for the class above referred to, without reducing, if not destroying, its efficiency as an instructor of the young. Bona fide residents of Ontario, between the ages of seven and twenty-one, who cannot see to read ordinary type without injury are admitted to the School without charge for board, tuition or books. Applications should be made to the Principal, H. F. Gardiner, Brantford, in time to have all arrangements completed before the opening of the session in September.

Don't let me see you head down again."—"Am I to be always like this?" asked Doherty, staring away above the little sergeant's head—"You are."—"Then I'll say goodbye to ye, sergeant, for I'll never see yez again!"—Winnipeg Voice.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

The habit of deception has become so ingrained in the English nature that even where the lives of their own people are concerned the British authorities continue to lull unfortunate civilians to sleep with soothing stories about the impossibility of their coming to any harm from Zeppelin attacks, well knowing all the time how terrible the peril is and how much injury has already been caused by our airships.

Nevertheless the accursed aircraft of the Swabian count bob up on all sides and those who once laughed so loud are now silent. The fiery bullets even dared to fall on London, and not a single house only, but entire streets were converted into ashes.

Will they again, as they did when London was shelled, attempt to deny the success of our aircrafts? Will they tell more stories about murdered women and children so that they may soften the world's heart and cause tears of pity to well forth? Let them do so.

Though the English are silent, the stones will talk. And these stones, they speak of German heroism, they speak of a people whose seamen do not hide behind the rocks and of airmen who fear not to enter the gaping mouth of the British lion.

In the subterranean passages of France and Flanders, high in the air, deep in the waters of the ocean, we battle and we triumph, and devouring fire falls on London and Harwich. The four elements have become our helpers and our friends—Leipziger Neueste Nachrichten.

IMMORTALS

Say not they die, those martyr souls
Whose life is winged with purpose fine;
Who leave us, pointing to the goals,
Who learn to conquer and resign.

Such cannot die; they vanquish time,
And fill the world with growing light;
Making the human life sublime
With memories of their sacred might.

They cannot die whose lives are part
Of that great life which is to be,
Whose hearts beat with the world's great heart,
And throb with its high destiny.

Then mourn not those who, dying, gave
A gift of greater light to man
Death stands abashed before the brave;
They own a life he may not ban.

War Notes

Sergeant Michael O'Leary, V.C., who took a German trench all by himself, is a young man of sense as well as a hero. Addressing a crowd in Hyde Park the other day, after it had wildly cheered him, he said: "All I ask of you fellows fit to serve is this: Don't stand looking at me and cheering me. That's no good. Come and join me. We want more men; so make up your minds to join. This is the only way to put down the German hordes."

Not only have many Americans come to Canada to enlist, but a young southerner recently returned from England states that hundreds of adverturous spirits are making their way to England on horse-boats and joining the colors of the empire from which their fore-fathers sprung. They are not being urged to enlist, for few of them need urging, but they are offering their lives for the ideal of democracy, unofficial allies from the greatest republic, who thinks the best way to deal with the kaiser is to get at grips with him—London Advertiser.

BRITAIN'S POSITION OUTLINED BY SIR EDWARD CARSON

Peace Would be Immoral and Impossible Under Existing Circumstances

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Sir Edward Carson, Attorney-General in the Asquith Cabinet, has prepared for the Associated Press a signed statement giving a broad outline of the first year of the war from the British standpoint, together with expression of the unalterable purpose of the British Government and people to carry on the war to a successful conclusion. The statement follows:

"How long will the war last, and what will be the result? To such questions as these any British subject can give but one answer and that is, that the war will last until the cause of the allies has been brought to a successful issue and Europe and the world has been relieved from the ideas involved in the aggression of Prussian domination. The word peace does not enter into our vocabulary at the present time. It is banished from our conversation as something immoral and impossible under existing circumstances. And yet we are the most peace-loving people in the world; a nation which throughout the globe, within its many dominions, has inculcated good government and social and industrial progress and the free exercise, in its widest sense, of civil and religious liberty.

A Progressive People

"Rightly or wrongly we have in the past devoted our energies and our intelligence, not to preparations for war but to that social progress which makes for the happiness and the contentment of the mass of our people. And this, no doubt, is the reason why other nations imaigne that we, as a nation of shopkeepers, are too indolent and apathetic to fight for and maintain these priceless liberties, won by the men who laid the foundation of our vast Empire.

"But they are entirely mistaken in forming any such estimate of the temperament or determination of our people. Great Britain hates war, and no nation enters more reluctantly on its horrible and devastating operations; but, at the same time, no nation when it is driven to war by the machinations of its foes, which desire to filch from it or from its co-champions of liberty any portion of their inherited freedom, is more resolved to see the matter through, at whatever cost, to a successful issue.

"A year of war has transformed Great Britain. Of our navy I need hardly speak. It has upheld to the fullest extent the great traditions which fill the pages of history in the past; it has driven its enemies off the seas; it holds vast oceans free for almost the uninterrupted commerce of neutral powers, and it has preserved these highways for its own supplies of material and food almost without interruption. I do not minimize the perils of the submarines, which is in process of being dealt with through the careful and zealous watchfulness of our Admiralty, but while the submarine has enabled the Germans to commit savage and inhuman atrocities contrary to the laws of civilization and against the settled rules of international law, it has done nothing to affect the vast commerce of our Empire. The German submarine attack has signally failed to hamper our military operations. Under the protection of our navy, hundreds of thousands of men have been brought to the fighting area from the most distant parts of the Empire. Troopships are crossing daily to France, and not a single ship or a single soldier has been lost in the passage.

Millions in Training

"At the commencement of the war an expedition force of 170,000 men and a small territorial army of 260,000 men for defence against invasion was all we could boast of, but today Great Britain teems with military camps, in which millions of men of the finest material are being trained and equipped to cope with every emergency.

"No other nation in the world ever produced a volunteer army of such proportions. Each day brings to the colors thousands of men who had never thought of military service before, and each day as the enemy grows weaker, the infancy of our strength is growing into manhood and with increasing virility and prowess. No doubt some people are foolish enough to be influenced by the misrepresentations which are a part of equipment of our German enemies, who represent us as a decadent race. But they know little of the spirit of our people.

"As the problem unfolds from day to day, and the task before us expands in its herculean form, our spirit becomes more determined and our effort and organization quietly shape themselves to meet the emergencies that are before us. That all this is being accomplished without dramatic demonstration and foolish boasting is not a sign of weakness, but of strength.

The Russian Reverses

"The splendid heroism of our Russian and French allies is an additional incentive to our national honor to carry on to an end the obligations which we have undertaken. And if for the moment we are confronted with the impossibility of offensive action by our brave Russian allies, and are compelled to wake a costly and difficult war against the Turks in the Dardanelles as well as against our enemies in Flanders, we cheerfully resolve to fit ourselves for the situation which confronts us.

"It is, of course, true that our country has not been accustomed to organization and discipline which leads unthinkable men from time to time to imagine that there could be a different discipline in the coal fields or the work shops from that which prevails in the trenches; but all that is a mere temporary difficulty and it cannot impede the country, which has made up ites mind to win if it has to spend the last man and its last dollar in the process.

"The success of the recent war loan shows how anxious our people are to invest their money in the prosecution of the war. Not only is it the largest loan that has ever been floated, but it represents not merely the accumulation of capital of a few large banks, but the hard-earned saving of small investors in every part of the country. Although our shores are not invaded and we have not experienced the impelling necessities of a war waged in our own country, yet there is hardly a family in any village in the land that has not willingly sent its sons to fight our battles in foreign lands. While I see day by day more anxiety from every man to do his share, I can see no sign nor trace of wavering in any section of the community.

War Forced On Us

"We have the right to say to neutrals that our cause is just; that the war has been forced upon us, and that we are making and are going to make every sacrifice that makes a nation great to bring our cause to a successful conclusion. We have a right, I think, to ask neutrals to examine their own consciences as to whether they have done everything that neutrals ought to do or can do in insisting that the laws of humanity and the doctrines of international law which have been so carefully fostered in times of peace are carried out. Neutrals are the executive power to compel observance of the principles of international law, and if they fail to do so the result must be disastrous to the world at large, in the present and in the future, and give free play to a savagery and barbarism which is none the less revolting because it carries out its methods by the aid of the discoveries of scientific research and progress.

"But, however that may be, our courage is undaunted. It grows into exaltation by reason of the difficulties that surround us, and we will go on to the end without fear or trembling and in the certain inspiration of a victory which will restore to the world that peace which can alone bring happiness and contentment to the mass of its citizens.

GARRISON FOR OTTAWA AT DUKE'S SUGGESTION

One Infantry Regiment Will be Stationed Permanently at Rockliffe

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—The city of Ottawa is to become a garrison city during the war, and a regiment of infantry, with the necessary equipment, will be kept permanently here. The 77th Battalion, now being recruited by Lt.-Col. Street, will be quartered at Rockcliffe, it is stated, for garrison duty, to be replaced in all probability later by another regiment when the 77th may be despatched for active service at the front.

It is understood that the decision to keep troops permanently for garrison purposes at Ottawa was due to the representations of his Royal Highness the Governor-General, who contended that the seat of Parliament, the capital of the Dominion, where the treasury, the mint, the Militia Headquarters and other important buildings are located, should have an adequate guard of troops.

OUR BRIGHT BLUE SUN.

It Is the Air or Moisture That Makes It Look White or Red.

There is a general belief that sun light is white and therefore that the sun is white. But this is a long way from the real condition of things. The sun is a bright blue, as blue in color as seems the water of a deep mountain lake. It is the air that makes the sun seem white.

Everybody has noticed when the air is very foggy that the sun appears as a red ball, as red as a redhot poker Yet we know the sun hasn't changed at all. It is the mist in the air that makes the color seem different. And in the dawn and dusk, no matter how clear the air may be, the sun is much redder in color than when it is overhead in the middle of the day. The reason for this is that in the morning and evening we see the sun through a thicker belt of air. It is this thicker air which makes it look redder, just as it is the fog which has the same effect. If the air were taken away entirely, then we should expect the sun to be still less red.

Since in the middle of the day the sun is white, how could it be less red? By being blue.

The atmosphere is really like a thick orange colored veil spread between the world and the bright blue sun. Like a veil it dims the light, and its color acts as a filter. Actually the air stops most of the blue rays, but lets nearly all the orange colored rays come through.

It has been quite definitely shown that if it were not for the orange colored veil of the air we could not live upon the earth today. Even as it is the actinic rays of sunlight give sun stroke in summer, and it is in the blue and violet rays that the damage is done. The air softens the sunlight enough for us to bear it.

A few million years hence the sun will be yellow, and already some of its earlier blue heat is gone. But for a million years ahead—"we should worry!"—New York American.

TAKING A PERFECT BREATH.

Proper Method of Filling the Entire Lung Cavity With Air.

It does not suffice to breathe pure air It must be properly breathed. All breathing should be done through the nose—never through the mouth—and, if possible, in the open air, or, at least, before an open window, and several times daily.

The passage of air through the nose has the advantage of being warmed and moistened and, in reality, filtered.

While deep breathing has been advised and written about during recent years, it is interesting to know that oriental teachers and philosophers have known and practiced it for generations. This best of all practices may not promote muscular strength or increase the size of the biceps, but it surely makes directly for the health of the lungs, heart, liver and abdominal organs, and thereby greatly and surely serves the brain.

To take a perfect breath:

Stand erect by an open window or out of doors. Pucker up the lips as though starting to whistle and slowly blow out the breath and empty the lungs of air. Then, closing the mouth, breathe through the nose, inhaling slowly and steadily, filling the entire lung cavity, which is done by bringing into play the diaphragm, which, descending, exerts a gentle pressure on the abdomen. In the final movement the lower part of the abdomen will be drawn in, which movement gives the lungs a support and also helps to fill the highest points of the lungs. Retain the breath for a few seconds. Then once again pucker up the lips as if to whistle and through the small opening slowly and gently exhale the breath.—Boston Post.

The Sun in Alaska.

Noon on Dec. 21 at Fairbanks, Alaska, is identical with midnight, June 21, at the same place except that it is usually 130 degrees colder and there is snow on the ground. In winter the sun in interior Alaska rises about 10 o'clock and sinks out of sight again about 2 in the afternoon.

The temperature in the latter part of December usually is 40 degrees below zero. Sometimes it goes down to 60 below. In summer the thermometer on June 21 will often show 90 degrees in the shade, thus giving a range of 150 degrees.—Popular Mechanics.

Blue Blood Versus Oil

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Billy Perkins had the usual American assurance, but it never got into the limelight till he went to Spain as a clerk in the American embassy. Billy had means and no taste for business. Indeed, since his living was ground out for him by coupons which fell like gold leaves from sundry bonds he had inherited, what he wanted was an apology for occupation. A friend having been appointed secretary of legation at Madrid, he secured Billy a position as brevet clerk, which gave him the right to say that he was attached to the embassy, but he was seldom if ever called upon to do any work.

As an attache of the legation he received invitations, and, since Americans are considered an unconventional people, he was accorded social liberties that other men were not granted. For instance, there were families which he was permitted to visit as young men visit in America—that is, he was not forced to converse with young women from the sidewalk, they standing on a balcony high above his head. He was permitted to see certain young ladies in their homes, but not alone. Some member of the family other than the lady on whom he called was always present.

One young lady in whose home he was accorded an entrance was a daughter of Don Sebastiano Herrera, a Spanish grandee whose family tree was planted in the time of Ferdinand and Isabella. Dona Inez, the daughter, was destined for some nobleman who would be considered worthy to enter the Herrera family. As for Billy Perkins, had he ten times the fortune he possessed he was not for a moment to be thought of as a husband for her.

Nevertheless the Herreras had traveled abroad a good deal and had thrown off some of the most ultra of their Spanish conventional forms. Their daughter met men at balls, and occasionally one was invited to her home—of course only by her father or mother. Billy Perkins met her at a function given by his chief, the ambassador, and fell desperately in love with her.

Dona Inez evinced a desire to learn English, and when Billy offered to teach her her mother was much pleased with the offer. The good lady had a high admiration for the English nobility and had formed a design of taking her daughter to England, hoping that her rare beauty would catch an English nobleman. However this may be, Billy was permitted to come to the house two evenings in the week to give Dona Inez lessons in the English language. Of course her mother or some member of the family who could be relied upon was present to watch that no lovemaking passed between the two young persons. Moreover, whoever was on watch understood enough English to know if Billy were trying to work that language for the purpose of making love, though, since Dona Inez did not understand a word of English, this was hardly necessary.

Nothing is so delightful to two young persons of opposite sex as to outwit those who are placed on guard over them. Billy's method of teaching English was to have his pupil read something printed in that language or convert something printed from Spanish into the English tongue. This required the use of a Spanish and English dictionary.

One evening when the two were at work using the dictionary every few minutes, Billy, turning the leaves, stopped and put his finger on the word "your." Then he turned to the words "eyes" and put his finger on that word. In this way he spelled out "your eyes are like beautiful twin lakes, and your lashes are like the rushes growing on the borders." Then Inez took the dictionary and by the same means said, "You Americans are great flatterers." This was followed by a sentence from Billy—"There is no such beauty in America as yours."

These few communications occupied half an hour, but what time was lost in looking up words was gained in the fervor of the sentences. In two or three evenings Billy had made as much love as some men with every facility would make in a year. And Dona Inez, if she was not an apt scholar at learning English, certainly understood with marvelous facility what was said to her by this method of communication.

Before Dona Inez had learned enough English to catch a British nobleman she had been caught by an American scamp who should have been put in the stocks for daring to make love to the daughter of a Spanish grandee. However, he came out frankly at last and one morning, marching boldly into the presence of Don Sebastiano, asked him for his daughter's hand. The old gentleman looked at the American brevet clerk aghast and asked him what he meant. Billy replied that he meant exactly what he said.

"Are you aware," asked Don Sebastiano, "that our family were nobles at a time when the land in which you were born was inhabited by savages?"

"I am," said Billy, "and are you aware that my ancestors drove your ancestors out of Texas? My ancestors bought an oil tract of your ancestors, and now I am in receipt of $20,000 a month from the property?"

Billy intended by this statement to strike the nail on the head, and he did, for Don Sebastiano, with all his blue blood, was as poor as a church mouse. Billy married Dona Inez, and the pair now live in winter in Spain, in summer in America.

GALLANTRY OF BRITISH AGAINST GERMAN FIRE PROJECTORS

Hold a Wood Though Swept by Terrible Cross Fire

LONDON, Aug. 1.—British Headquarters sends the following description of the German "fire projector" attack on the British trenches at Hooge: At 3.30 in the morning on July 30 the German attack began with a tremendous fire concentrated from three sides upon the Hooge salient. There was a direct fire of 5-inch and field guns against our parapet, in addition to high explosive shells of longer range, and a rain of every sort of bomb from mortars. After over half an hour of this the enemy crept towards our battered parapets by saps they had carried forward, and began to play upon what was left of the defences with fire projectors.

Like Fire-extinguishers.

The fire projector is carried strapped to the back exactly as is a fire-extinguisher, and apparently contains some inflammable oil, under pressure, which when the cock is opened, projects a long, flaming jet. Weakened by the tremendous shelling they had undergone and with their defences badly knocked about, the troops holding the salient had to relinguish the trenches on the north side of the road, and fell back slowly from the ridge. Owing to delays inseparable from the situation, it was impossible to get a counter-attack into shape before three in the afternoon. Then the advance was made, partly under cover of an irregular piece of forest known as the Zouave Wood, which offered the only concealment.

"A Flail of Thunderbolts."

But from the ridge east of Hooge the German guns swept the wood, the whole place looking as though it had been threshed with a flail of thunderbolts, yet the troops held on to it and even succeeded with the greatest gallantry in advancing to the edge of it, facing the enemy, which was found in the German fashion to be completely swept by machine gun crossfire, so advance beyond it was almost certain death. None the less, the advance was repeatedly attempted and small isolated parties of officers and men succeeded in getting right up to the barbed-wire in front of the enemy's trenches. We were in the end obliged to be content with holding the line of wood to which the troops had clung with such determination.

Another account says:

The supporting troops nearby, in spite of catching some of this concentrating fire, held on. The German infantry finally made a counter-attack, which was met with heavy machine gun fire.

Some of the ground lost in the two days of continuous fighting has already been recovered.

JUSTICE THE BASIS OF TRUE CHARACTER

Failure to Recognize Justice Has Brought About the Time of Trouble.

Justice the Foundation of God's Throne—Justice the Underlying Principle of the Mosaic Law—Difference Between Justice and Love—The Christian Obligated to Keep the Golden Rule—Justice in the Home, in Business, in the Church — Appreciation of the Rights of Others—Love's Victory Over Justice Through Self-Sacrifice.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 1.—Pastor Russell is here in attendance upon the I. B. S. A. Convention assembled in our city. To-day he delivered a strong discourse on the Golden Rule — "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." (Matthew 7:12.) He said:

No part of God's instructions to His Church is more important than this exhortation to justice. Everything that God does is based upon absolute justice, and He invites His people to be like Him—to cultivate and develop in our characters the great qualities which He possesses, and which He has magnified and illustrated to us. Many have the thought that justice is a very ordinary matter, which practically everybody recognizes and follows. But such is not the case. Many would say, "Do you not know that we are Christians, and that to practice justice would naturally be the duty of all Christians? Why do you not rather exhort us to cultivate love?" We reply, Justice should always take precedence; we have no right to do less than justice to any member of the human family or, for that matter, even to an animal.

The trouble with the whole world is the failure to recognize this very principle. Justice is the foundation of God's Throne. It is the basic principle upon which He would have us build character, and upon which He deals with all His creatures. It is because this principle of justice is not being recognized that the world is in trouble, and that the great tribulation is coming upon our race, the Scriptures assure us. While in mankind in general there is very little to love, yet every human being should receive justice. As followers of Christ, we are to be the foremost in exercising justice towards all.

What a grand world this would be if every human being would resolve to carry out the instructions of this text! There would be no "doing" of a neighbor before he could "do" you; but there would be a sparing of the neighbor, a taking into account his weaknesses and his interests. Whoever would take advantage of another would do something contrary to the welfare of the other. As ye would, as Jesus said, that others should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Thirty-five hundred years ago God called the Israelites out of Egypt. In substance He said to them, "Four hundred years ago I made a Covenant with Abraham that his Seed should bless the world. Are you ready to have that promise fulfilled to you?" They declared that they were ready. So He brought them to Mount Sinai, where they entered into a Covenant with Him to do whatever He directed. He gave them the Ten Commandments and said to them, "If you wish to be the Seed of Abraham that is to bless mankind, keep these commandments."

That Law Covenant was based upon justice alone; it did not ask them to love their enemies. According to whether or not they would render justice would be the Divine decision as to their worthiness of being considered Abraham's Seed that would bless the world. But they were not able to render justice, to do to their neighbor as they would that he should do to them. This failure was due to their fallen condition, because sin had become ingrained in human nature. (Romans 3:20.) The grasping disposition which has ever since manifested itself amongst that people began to appear; and so, although God bore with the nation for more than sixteen hundred years, not one of them obtained the reward of everlasting life which was offered to those who would keep the Law.—Leviticus 18:5; Romans 10:5.

It is not an easy matter to keep the Law Covenant of Justice. We see that the Jews failed to do so. We know that the Apostle declared that by the deeds of the Law no imperfect flesh shall be saved. Nevertheless God says, "Unless you keep the Law, you shall not be the Seed of Abraham that will bless all the families of the earth."

The Scriptures point out that the Church of Christ is the Spiritual Seed of Abraham. (Galatians 3:8, 16, 29.) Therefore they are obligated to keep the Law. To enable them to do what no fallen flesh can do, God has made a special arrangement for the Church, though not for the Jewish nation, the typical people. Knowing that mankind were so fallen that none could keep perfectly His Law, He sent His Son into the world to help our race. Our Lord, being perfect, uncontaminated with the fallen race of Adam, "Holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners," was able to keep the Divine Law and did so. Then, in obedience to the Divine will, He offered up Himself in a sacrificial sense. The merit of the life which He sacrificed constitutes a credit which, according to the Father's Plan, our Lord will give for Adam and his race, as their Ransom-price, at the end of the Gospel Age.

As soon as our Lord shall have offered that merit to the Father, the whole world will be turned over to Him; and immediately He will begin His great work of ruling and blessing all the families of the earth. The long delay has been because of another part of the Plan. It was the Divine will that He should select a Church from the world, to share with Him the great future work of blessing humanity. Therefore He will not begin His Reign until the predestinated number of the Church class shall have been selected, tested, and changed by the power of the First Resurrection. Then the Spiritual Seed of Abraham will be complete.

It is well to note that the Spiritual Seed of Abraham is not the natural kind. Even Jesus as a man could never have blessed the world. He could have set up a good human government, but could have no right to give life to the dead. Therefore He could never have rolled away the curse of death, with all its concomitants. So it was for Him to do something more than keep the Divine Law—something that Justice never required, something of self-sacrifice. Keeping the Law merely authorized Jesus to live forever; and if He had set up His Kingdom without giving His life as a Ransom, He could not have blessed mankind; for all are sinners under condemnation to death.

Besides keeping the Law, Jesus presented His body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, and His reasonable service of sacrifice—prompted by love. It is our first duty also to keep the Law, to live up to its standard as nearly as possible. But having enlisted under the banner of Christ, it is additionally our duty to present our bodies a living sacrifice, as those who walk in His steps, faithful unto death. Thus we Christians are obligated beyond all other people. All are obligated to the Golden Rule of Justice, but we by love—something much more than justice.

If we could, we would be absolutely just in thought, word, and deed. But this we cannot do; for none of Adam's race can keep the Divine Law. Selfishness is deeply ingrained in our natural body; and by reason of this fact we fail to reach full perfection. But when we fail, we are not condemned; for with us the conditions are not the same as with the Jews. (Romans 8:1.) The blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from all imperfection; the mercy of Christ covers all that we cannot do.

This does not excuse us, however, from doing our very best. If with our hearts we recognize the Golden Rule, we shall seek to conform even our thoughts to it. We shall think and speak as generously of our neighbor as we would wish him to think and speak of us. We shall act as generously toward him as we would wish him to act toward us. This principle would be exercised daily toward all. No matter how imperfect we are to begin with, the work of God's grace should more and more transform us, that we may be more and more like our Lord Jesus.

As far as our hearts are concerned, we must become exact copies of God's dear Son, though not reaching His glorious standard. To that we may not attain while in the flesh. Daily we may need to ask Divine forgiveness for our shortcomings. But He who knoweth the heart is pleased to see us doing the best we can do, seeking to grow in grace, in knowledge, and in all the requirements of the Divine standards. This was the disposition of our Lord Jesus; and the Father loves all who manifest the same spirit. It is not enough that we recognize the downward tendencies of sin, and start out to walk in God's ways of righteousness. If we have His Spirit we shall meditate on His character and copy His attributes. Whoever seeks to do good to all will never wish to do less than justice. He would rather do more. Therefore the Apostle says, "Love is the fulfilling of the Law."

When our Lord gave His Church a new commandment (John 13:34), it included everything that pertained to the Law. Whoever has this love will appreciate that it was love, not justice, that led our Lord to leave the Heavenly glory and sacrifice His life on behalf of humanity. The Father did not command the Son to make this sacrifice. God does not command any one to sacrifice his personal interests on behalf of others. He had a Program to be carried out. If the Son desired to carry it out, He would receive the reward promised.

So our Lord was quite willing to endure death itself, even death on the Cross, from love for the Father. Having the Father's disposition, He sympathized with fallen humanity. God had purposed to redeem mankind and to bring all the willing and obedient back to Divine favor and blessing. Our Lord Jesus longed to do this work. This was more than justice. If we have enlisted under His banner, to share with Him in the sufferings of this present life and in the future glory, honor, and immortality, then we covenant to follow the Law of Love. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." Love would do more than keep the Mosaic Law. Love includes everything along the line of justice; it would lead one to sacrifice for his neighbor, for his friends, and for his family. This is more than justice.

Many of God's people seem not to realize that justice takes precedence of love. God requires justice; and if we have agreed to give Him more than justice we are not thereby excused from rendering justice. Everywhere around us we find injustice. There are parents who do not deal justly with their children, who take advantage of their children in various ways. A parent owes it to his children not merely to bring them into the world and to get them to work for the family interests, but to provide them with a reasonable education and a religious home training. Each should know what are his own rights in the home and should observe the rights of others.

A good man's sons might run away from home, but very seldom will a rightly trained child do so. In many homes the children are not treated according to the principles of justice. Often parents fail to realize the rights of grown sons and daughters, but continue to treat them as children. Parents should cultivate that broad sympathy which would enable them to help their children to decide all their affairs. As a child matures, there should be an independence of thought. Suddenly it breaks over the boundary; and if the child has been properly trained while the body has been growing, the youth is bound to think and act for himself, but will always seek the guidance of the parents.

There are employers who have failed to give their employes all their reasonable rights. Of course, one cannot give everybody all that each might ask; for some people would demand everything and then not be satisfied. But with the right kind of employer the employe does not find it necessary to ask for his rights. The employer will insist that he shall have them.

Then there are people intent upon managing their friends. They are always telling others what to do and how to do it. We should be modest and respect the rights of others, but should not attempt to force our opinions upon them. When others ask us what to do and how to do it, then it is time to tell them, should we consider it proper to do so. If people come to me for advice I say to them, "If I were in your place, I think that I would do thus and so; but the matter is for you to decide." By speaking in this way, we put the responsibility upon the proper individual.

We have spoken about the obligations of parents. Let us consider the obligations of children. The Golden Rule would say, As you would that your children should do to you when you become advanced in years, do even so to your parents. Children should get this viewpoint. If every child were taught along this line, when it reached maturity the parent would have no need to worry about the child's manifesting gratitude for the parental love and care which it has received. The parent would say, "My children have had the principles of justice deeply ingrained from childhood that they would be entirely dissatisfied with anything wrong."

We have spoken of the employer; let us now look at the employe. Imagine their positions reversed. What would each think it right to do for his employes or toward his employer? What would be the right kind of terms, the right kind of feeling? This course would bring about a great change between employers and employes.

So as we consider what would be the right thing to do, and are willing to do what is right, we become more just in our dealings with all, including our business associates. Whether we buy or sell, there is a fair, reasonable way of dealing. It is wrong to buy so as to cause those who sell to lose money. We should be satisfied that the man who sells goods to us should make a reasonably fair profit. If we were selling, we should expect to make a reasonably fair profit, not an unjust one. The Golden Rule would regulate the matter.

While the whole Church is built upon the principle that the Gospel Church are to lay down their lives for the brethren, nevertheless some of God's dear children fail to recognize the principles of justice in their dealings with each other. Whenever a difficulty arises, we need especially to examine our own hearts and conduct to see whether the fault be ours. These difficulties nearly always result from a violation of the principle of justice.

The foundation of God's Throne is Justice. The Church that is built according to His arrangement is based upon this same principle. Each member may yield his own rights, but he must not transgress those of others. We should be very glad to see others act justly toward us; but we should not necessarily stand on our rights anywhere. Love ignores many of its own rights. Our Lord's life on earth was one of sacrifice. In the Church or in the family or in business we should use good judgment in the doing of God's will rather than in taking advantage of others.

As we do this, we are cultivating the spirit of justice. Do we not see how this applies in every direction? For instance, God's Law was originally given to Adam; God's Justice inflicted the death penalty for the breaking of that Law. He would not set aside His Law, His Justice, but He would bring in a blessing through the Lord Jesus Christ. Love gains this victory over Justice, not by violating Justice, but by sacrificing self. So it is for us to sacrifice ourselves in the interest of the Lord, the Truth and the brethren; and by thus doing, we are really conserving our own best interests and are growing in grace, in knowledge, and in character-likeness to our God.

Cream of Potato Soup.

Boil and mash six good sized potatoes. Heat a pint of milk to the scalding point and stir into it a tablespoonful of butter rubbed into an equal amount of flour. When the milk is smooth and thick beat into it slowly the potatoes (mashed) and stir to a cream like soup. Season to taste with pepper, salt, and onion juice, and just before removing from the fire add a teaspoonful of minced parsley.

Spinach Is Wholesome.

Among the green vegetables spinach is invaluable, and once a day is not too often to have it. It contains natural elements which are most wholesome to the system. To satisfy the craving for acid a little vinegar may be poured over the vegetable. Spinach is palatable served hot or cold, and for this reason is suitable for luncheon or dinner.

"Not for worlds, my dear Miss Mewlstone;" but Phillis was quite touched at this unexpected kindness. Miss Mewlstone did not look sleepy now; her small blue eyes were wide open, and her round placid face wore a most kindly expression, and there was a tremulous movement of her hands, as though they were feeling after something. "It is only such a little bit of road; and though the trees make it dark, I am not the least afraid of going alone."

"Ah! just so. When we are young, we are brave; it is the old who are afraid of the grasshopper. I like your spirit, my dear; and so does she; though she is a little taken aback and disappointed; but anything that interests and rouses her is welcome. Even this may do her good; for it will give her something to think about besides her own troubles"

"I have heard of her troubles——" began Phillis; but a moving door arrested Miss Mewlstone's attention, and she interrupted her hurriedly:

"Ah! there is Phillips at last. Just so; you shall hear from me again. It is a gray satin,—one of her presents. —but I have never had it made up; for what is the use, when we keep no company?" went on Miss Mewlstone incoherently. "Oh! is that you Phillips? Please go with this young lady to the lodge-gate.—You shall make it after your own fashion," she whispered in Phillis's ear; "and I am not as particular as other people. There is Magdalene now. Ah! just so. Good-night, my dear; and mind the scraper by the gate."

Phillis was almost sorry when the obsequious Phillips left her; for the road certainly looked terribly dark. There was no moon, and the stars chose to be invisible; and there was a hot thundery feeling in the air that suggested a storm. And she moved aside with a slight sensation of uneasiness—not fear, of course not fear—as a tall, gloomy-looking figure bore swiftly down on her; for, even if a girl be ever so brave, a very tall man walking fast on a dark night with a slouching hat like a conspirator's is rather a terrifying object; and how could she know that it was Archie Drummond in his old garden-hat, taking a constitutional?

But he brought himself up in front of her with a sudden jerk.

"Miss Challoner!—alone at this time of night!"

"Why, it is not ten; and I could not wait for Dorothy to fetch me," returned Phillis, bound to defend herself, and quite palpitating with relief; not that she was afraid—not a bit of it!—but still, Mr. Drummond's presence was very welcome.

"I suppose I shall do as well as Dorothy?" he returned veering round with the greatest ease, just as though he were Dick, and bound to escort a Challoner. "Challoners' Squire,"—that was Dick's name among people.

"Oh poor Dick!" thought Phillis, with a sudden rush of tenderness for her old playmate; and then she said, demurely but with a spice of malice—

'Thank you, Mr. Drumomnd. The road is so gloomy that I shall be glad of your escort this evening; but we shall have to do without that sort of thing now, for our business may often bring us out after dark, and we must learn not to be too particular."

"Oh, this must not be!" he returned, decidedly; and, though it was too dark to see his face; she knew by his voice that he was dreadfully shocked. "I must see your mother and talk to her about this; for it would never do for you to run such risks. I could not allow it for a moment; and as your clergyman"—coming down from his high horse, and stammering a little,—"I have surely—surely a right ——" But Phillis snapped him up in a moment, and pretty sharply too, for she had no notion of a young man giving himself airs and torturing her.

"Oh, no right at all!" she assured him; "clergymen could only rebuke evil-doers, to which class she and her sisters did not belong, thank Heaven!" to which Mr. Drummond devoutly said an "amen." "And would he please tell her if dressmakers were always met two and two, like the animals in the ark? and how would it sound when she or Nan had been fitting on a dress, on a winter's evening, if they were to refuse to leave the house until Dorothy fetched them? and how——" But here Mr. Drummond checked her, and the darkness hid his smile.

'Now you are beyond me, Miss Challoner In a matter of detail, a man, even a parson, is often at fault. Is there no other way of managing this odious business? Forgive me; the word slipped out by accident! Could you not do the fitting, or whatever you call it, by daylight, and stay at home quietly in the evening like other young ladies?"

"Of course not," returned Phillis, promptly. She had not the least idea why it could not be done; indeed, if she had been perfectly cool—which she was not, for Mrs. Cheyne had decidedly stroked her the wrong way and ruffled her past endurance—she would have appreciated the temperate counsel vouchsafed her, and acquiesced in it without a murmur; but now she seemed bent on contradiction.

"Our opinions seem to clash to-night," returned Mr. Drummond, good-humoredly,—but feeling that the young lady beside him had decidedly a will of her own. "She is very nice, but she is not as gentle as her sister," he said to himself; which was hard on Phillis, who, though she was not meek, being a girl of spirit, was wholesomely sweet and sound to the heart's core.

One may be supposed to know one's business best," she replied rather dryly to this. And then, fearing that she might seem ungracious to a stranger, who did not know her and her little ways, she went on in a more cordial tone; "I am afraid you think me a little cross to-night; but I have been having a stand-up fight, and am rather tired. Trying to battle against other people's prejudices makes one irritable. And then, because I am down and out of heart about things, our clergyman thinks fit to lecture me on propriety."

"Only for your good. You must forgive me if I have taken too much upon myself," returned Mr. Drummond, with much compunction. "You seem so lonely,—no father or brother; at least—pardon me—I believe you have no brother?"

"Oh, no; we have no brother," sighed Phillis. Their acquaintance was in too early a stage to warrant her in bringing in Dick's name. Besides, that sort of heterogeneous relationship is so easily misconstrued. And then she added, "I see. You meant to be very kind, and I was ungrateful."

"I only wish I could find some way of helping you all,' was his reply to this. But it was said with such frank kindness that Phillis's brief haughtiness vanished. They were standing at the gate of the Friary by this time; but Mr. Drummond still lingered. It was Phillis who dismissed him.

"Good-night, and many thanks," she said, brightly. "It is too late to ask you in, for you see, even dressmakers have their notions of propriety." And as she uttered this malicious little speech, the young man broke into a laugh that was heard by Dorothy in her little kitchen.

"Oh, that is too bad of you, Miss Challoner," he said, as soon as he recovered himself; but, nevertheless, he liked the girl better for her little joke.

Mr. Drummond's constitutional had lasted so long that Mattie grew quite frightened, and came down in her drab dressing gown to wait for him. It was not a becoming costume, but it was warm and comfortable; but then Mattie never considered what became her. If any one had admired her, or cared how she looked or what she wore, or had taken an interest in her for her own sake, she would doubtless have developed an honest liking for pretty things. But what did it matter under the present circumstances? Mr. Drummond was lighting his chamber candle when Mattie rushed out to him,—a grotesque little figure, all capes and frills.

"Oh, Archie, how you frightened me! Where have you been?"

Archie shrugged his shoulders at this.

"I am not aware, Matilda," for in severe moods he would call her by her full name, a thing she especially disliked from him,— "I did not know before that I was accountable to you for my actions. Neither am I particularly obliged to you for spying upon me in this way." For the sight of Mattie at that time of night was peculiarly distasteful. Why was he to be watched in his own house?

'Oh, dear, Archie! How can you say such things? Spy on you, indeed! when there is a storm coming up, and I was so anxious."

"I am very much obliged to you," returned Archie, ironically; 'but, as you see I am safe, don't you think you had better take off that thing"—pointing to the obnoxious garment—"and go to bed!" And such was his tone that poor Matite fled without a word, and cried a little in her dark room, because Archie would not be kind to her and let her love him, but was always finding fault with one trifle or other To-night it was her poor old dressing-gown, which had been her mother's, and had been considered good enough for Mattie And then he had called her a spy. And here she gave a sob that caught Archie's ears as he passed her door.

'Good-night, you little goose!" he called out, for the sound made him uncomfortable; and though the words were contemptuous, the voice was not, and Mattie at once dried her eyes and was comforted.

But before Archie went to sleep that night he made up his mind that it was his duty as a clergyman and a Christian to look over Phillis's wilfulness, and to the utmost of his power the strangers, widow and fatherless, that Providence had placed at his very gates.

'They are so very lonely, poor things!' he said to himself; "not a man about them. By the bye, I noticed she did not wear an engagement ring." But which was the "she" he meant, was an enigma known only to himself. 'Not a man about them!" he repeated, in a satisfied manner, for as yet the name of Dick had not sounded in his ear.

ANTICS OF TUMBLEWEED.

This Curious Bushy Growth Is the Clown of Vegetation.

Though Mark Twain tells about coyotes and prairie dogs, animals which I looked for, but regret to say I did not see, he ignores the tumbleweed, the most curious thing—animal, vegetable or mineral—that crossed my vision as I crossed the plain. I cannot understand why Mark Twain did not mention this weed, because he must have seen it and it must have delighted him with its comical gyrations.

Tumbleweed is a bushy plant which grows to a height of perhaps three feet and has a mass of little twigs and branches which make its shape almost perfectly round. Fortunately for the amusement of mankind it has a weak stalk, so that when the plant dries the wind breaks it off at the bottom and then proceeds to roll it over and over across the land. I well remember the first tumbleweed we saw.

"What on earth is that thing?" cried my companion suddenly, pointing out through the car window. I looked. Some distance away a strange buff colored shape was making a swift, uncanny progress toward the east. It wasn't crawling, it wasn't running, but it was traveling fast with a rolling, tossing, careening motion like a barrel half full of whisky going down hill. Now it tilted one way, now another; now it shot swiftly into some slight depression in the plain, but only to come bounding lightly out again with an air indescribably gay, abandoned and inane.

Soon we saw another and another. They became more and more common as we went along until presently they were everywhere, careening in their maudlin course across the prairie and piled high against the fences along the railroad's right of way like great concealing snowdrifts.

Tumbleweed is the clown of vegetation, and it has the air as it rolls along of being conscious of its comicality, like the smart caniche in the dog show which goes and overturns the basket behind the trainer's back or the circus clown who runs about with a rolling gait, tripping, turning double and triple somersaults, rising, running on, tripping, falling and turning over and over again.—Julian Street in Collier's Weekly.

WATER AND LIGHT.

Why One Can See Deep Into the Sea When High Above It.

The reason why one is able to see to a greater depth in water when he is at a considerable height above it than when he stands on a level with it is because of the absence of pronounced refraction by the molecules of water. One above the surface of perfectly still water, looking exactly downward toward the center of the earth, will see an object deep in the water by means of rays of light that have been reflected vertically upward. Therefore there is no refraction or bending the rays out of their straight course from object to eye.

But if you attempt to see an object at the bottom of a lake when standing on the bank the light has to traverse a much greater thickness of water, which quenches a portion, or maybe all, of the waves of light, and all not quenched are bent to quite a distance out of the original straight line. And the well known index of refraction of light (if of one kind) from water to air is 1.336, or the ratio of the sines of angles of incidence and refraction.

Proof: Place a straight stick in a basin, and it will appear to be straight as it really is; pour in water and the stick will appear to be bent by the phenomena attending refraction. For without refraction of light by glass, for instance, we could not have telescopes and microscopes.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

GOLD NUGGETS.

They Will Blister and Explode When Heated In a Bunsen Flame.

By what process is a nugget of gold compacted into form in which it is found? Sometimes a mass worth more than $5,000 is found. In answer to the question there is cited the attempt of an investigator in Australia to ascertain the workings of nature in this respect. This investigator, says the Science Siftings, cut and sliced and polished gold nuggets with the sole purpose of ascertaining just what was their structure.

The first thing he discovered was that there is one curious point of resemblance between nuggets and meteorites. Both when polished and etched with chlorine water exhibit a crystalline structure.

In the case of meteorites the lines thus exhibited on the etched surface are called Widmanstatten figures, and their presence is held to be one of the most invariable characteristics of those metallic bodies that fall from the sky to the earth. But it is not meant to be implied that gold nuggets have fallen from the sky because they exhibit a crystalline structure recalling that of meteorites. The resemblance is apparently only superficial, and the crystals of the nuggets differ in form from those of the meteorites.

Another curious fact is that when a nugget is heated in a Bunsen flame explosions take place on its surface Blisters are formed which continue to swell until they burst with a sharp report, and bits of gold are violently scattered about. It is evident that the nuggets contain either gases or some liquids or solids which are easily converted into the gaseous form, the expansion of which produces the explosions.

Her Tribute.

When Mr. Gladstone was at the height of his fame a sturdy old Tory Scotchwoman, who detested his principles, but who was curious concerning his oratory, decided to attend a political meeting for the sake of hearing him. But "that something gude micht come o' twa hours spent in sic company," she took her knitting along. When, the next day, a friend asked her opinion of the great liberal leader, she gave it honestly:

"Jean, there's nae doot ava', the mon's a wonder. He garred me drap twa stitches in Tammas' sock."

Precaution.

"Do you think you can support my daughter in the style to which she has been accustomed?'

"I think so," replied the earnest young man. "But maybe we'd better live with you a few years so that I can find out exactly what it's like."—Washington Star.

In One Lesson.

She—Well, can she?

"Yes; I made her. We hadn't been on the floor a minute when I stepped on her foot. You just ought to have seen her."—Yonkers Statesman.

"Isn't there anything he likes?"

"Yes, to grumble!"

DEATH OF A LAD

Frank Lord, a lad 14 years of age, died yesterday afternoon from an attack of pneumonia. Deceased was a ward of the Marchmont Home of this city, and of late had made his home with a Mr. Wannamaker, who resides in Ameliasburg Township. The boy was ill but a few days. He was an industrious lad and well liked by those who knew him. This afternoon the remains were interred in Belleville cemetery after a service at the Marchmont Home by Rev. R. C. Blagrave, rector of Christ Church.

RESCUED FROM DROWNING

Yesterday afternoon a lad named Boyle might have been the victim of a watery grave had it not been for the timely assistance rendered him by Mr. Thomas Corbett, of Calgary, an old Belleville boy, who is visiting here. The lad in question was bathing just east of the new Government dock when he became entangled by weeds and was unable to swim. Mr. Corbett heard his cries for help and went to his rescue, landing him safely on shore. This is by no means the first instance that Mr. Corbett has rescued persons from drowning. He is recognized as a water "dog", and is ever ready when emergency arises to save life.

Rescued Couple From the Lake

Stranded in Motor Boat at Midnight—Had Given up Hope

Robert Nelson and his wife were rescued from the lake at Toronto early this morning by Capt. Chapman and the life-saving crew. At 10.40 last night a telephone call was sent in that a gasoline launch was in great danger opposite stop 21 on the Lake Shore road. The life-saving crew set out immediately, but it was near midnight before they located the boat. At that time there was a high sea and the east wind was forcing the stranded launch up on the bank. Nelson and his wife were taken off the launch with difficulty, as the shore at this point is very steep and the water is deep.

While the launch was being towed back to the city Mr. Nelson stated that early in the evening he had run from Sunnyside to Long Branch. On the way home their launch became half filled with water and the engine stalled. He then began to wave the lantern to attract the attention of someone on shore. The boat was threatening to capsize every moment and he had no hope of being rescued until the life saving crew came in sight.

Mrs. Nelson is overcome with shock.

SHEOL; HADES; HELL; GRAVE

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me just a few words on three subjects that are greatly agitating the public mind today, namely, The Intermediate State, The Second Coming, and Britain's Chances in the Present War.

Regarding the intermediate state, all those diligently reading the scriptures must know and realize that we cannot get anything but a very hazy idea of it from the Old Testament scriptures because God's ancient people, the Jews, were divided into two parties on the subject—the Pharisees, who believed in an intermediate state and a resurrection from the dead, and the Saducees who did not.

I find by reading the secular history of those times that the heathen nations—the Greeks, Egyptians, Romans and others—had a better idea of the intermediate state than the Jews. I would like to quote many of their views, but cannot for lack of space. We must look to the New Testament for a correct understanding of the subject, and the parable of Dives and Lazarus will suffice.

Regarding the second coming: A judge on the bench asked a witness what his occupation was and he said, "Praying for rain or shine when they were needed, and prophesying the end of the world when the signs point that way." Now what does anyone know about it? Very little indeed! About all we know we get from the 24th chapter of Matthew. Every time there is a war or an earthquake, or a famine or any disaster by land or sea—every time the signs point that way, just a little bit, those good people of the Pastor Russell persuasion, like a hive of bees when stirred up, get busy on the subject and tell us "how, when and where" it is going to take place. Our Lord distinctly tells us that no man knoweth. The old Mother Church has her Advent season and her Advent Sunday, and once every year she gives us two good, straight, sensible and rational sermons on her Lord's teaching on the subject; and this is enough for all reasonable and sensible people. I notice when men get away from the teaching of the old Mother Church on any religious or scriptural doctrine they certainly get very queer and very ridiculous ideas into their heads; and instead of furthering the cause of Christianity they simply get the people all mixed up and full of doubt and unbelief. We have an instance of that right here in our own town now—Pastor Russell teaching the people that there is no Hell, and Rev. Mr. Horner preaching hell fire "to beat the band." It beats me how hard-headed, intelligent, business men are led away by such talk. They certainly would not be if they understood the teaching of the Mother Church, as laid down in her prayer book, as they ought.

Regarding Britain's chances in the war: I am informed by a gentleman lately returned from a visit to the United States that the American people think the Russians are beaten and Great Britain practically the same. Well, this belief is due partly to three causes, namely, unpardonable ignorance, impatience and indomitable conceit. They know practically nothing of the glorious history of the British nation. If they did or would take the trouble to read up a little of her history they would know better. The ignorance of the masses of the people south of line 45 (and also of many in our own Canada, I am sorry to say,) is really appalling, and is certainly making them appear ridiculous, because they, like all ignorant people, profess to know so much, and in consequence are the greatest of all and the most severe of all critics. If they were not so ill they would be slow to criticise the Motherland, for they would then know that she is fighting the battle of freedom for them as well as for the whole world. They would also know and realize how little they themselves have done or are doing for freedom's cause, notwithstanding their proud and vain boast of being the great and almost only champion of true liberty and freedom. Better look out, Uncle Sam, or you may make Miss Liberty, in New York harbor, ill.

Our American cousins must be made to understand—and they will before long—that to be beaten is not the way of the British. If all nations fighting Germany and Austria-Hungary were to quit except Britain, she alone could bring them to their knees. Lloyd George said at the commencement of the war that it was the long purse that would win out in this struggle. Britain rules the waves and has the commerce of these nations at her mercy. All she would have to do would be to sit tight and do her best, and British gold coupled with indomitable and incomparable British pluck and endurance, and her navy, would do the trick—would starve them out. It might take one year and it might take ten, but there could only be the one ending to it.

"Rule Britannia, Britannia rules the waves;
Britons never! never!! never!!! shall be slaves";

as sung by Teddy Roosevelt, the greatest American of them all.

Yours truly,
D. H. ACKERILL, V.S.

Belleville, Aug. 3rd, 1915.

Foundling Falls Into Good Hands

Healthy Baby Boy Left in a Yard at Thrasher's Corners

A healthy baby boy was left in the yard at the home of Amos Henry Lucas, Thrasher's Corners, near Belleville, last Saturday night. Mrs. Lucas brought the child to the city on Monday and notified the authorities here of the find. Mrs. Lucas has no idea as to the identity of the parents of the child but says she is anxious to know who the mother is and will promise that no harm shall come to her as far as she (Mrs. Lucas) is concerned as she is very much attached to the baby and is desirous of keeping it and raising it as her own. The child was found dressed and one extra garment was left with it. The baby has evidently fallen into good hands.

CHESS IS NOT SO SLOW.

Fifteen Moves an Hour Is the Rule in Championship Games.

What is the average length of time that a chess player in an international championship contest takes to move?

Among mere human players there are many traditions of how these peers of the game scorn to make a move in less than an hour; nay, more, how they consume whole evenings and oftentimes days in a single move. Such tales are rife in rural chess circles.

Now, in hard fact, these superplayers move more rapidly than the everyday expert. The common limit in international championship matches is fifteen moves an hour; a player failing to get within this limit loses the game no matter how commanding his position; an average of four minutes to the move is considered ample time. Indeed, when Capablanca challenged Lasker for the world's championship he was held to be justified in refusing Lasker's condition that the limit be lengthened to twelve moves an hour.

In championship games a chess clock is always used. This has two dials, each dial controlled by a plunger. Immediately after black has moved white strikes his plunger, which starts the hands on his dial recording time. At the instant he moves he strikes his plunger again, halting the mechanism. Black then strikes the plunger of his dial, starting his clock in turn. The dials thus record the net time each consumes in moving.

Of course in practical play the contestant gets more than the four minutes. The first eight or ten moves are almost always book plays, made in less than a minute each. This allows much time as credit on later moves. Furthermore, even when his opponent is moving, a player studies his own next move, based on the probable move of his opponent. But the day long or even the hour long move exists only in the imagination of the village champion.—Washington Post.

Four miles north of Lubin the Russians are fighting fiercely, disputing every foot of ground while covering their retreat.

"In an advance of seven miles with seven army corps, Field Marshal von Mackensen lost 35,000 men.

Kidnapping Rumor As Heiress Weds

Miss C. Barker, Worth $20,000,000 Marries H. Spalding While Police Guard House

HARBOR POINT, Mich., Aug. 2.—The wedding of Miss Catherine Barker, orphan heiress to a fortune of between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000, and Howard Spaulding, jr., of Chicago, took place this afternoon after rumors of attempted kidnapping and dissension in the wedding party had been set afloat and denied.

Early in the day Harbor Point, from the dock to the lighthouse, was guarded by special police. They were there it was said, because Miss Barker had received a threat that unless she paid $75,000 immediately, Mr. Spaulding, her intended, would be kidnapped. By some the threat is regarded as a hoax, but the police took no chances. The existence of any threat at all was denied by some of the bride's friends.

Peculiar markings about the window of the cottage in which her finance has been sleeping added to the concern of Miss Barker's guardian, James B. Forgan, and he went to George M. Gould, president of the village of Harbor Springs, and arranged for protection. The guard will remain until the costly presents have been removed.

As an additional means of barring undesirables Mr. Forgan arranged that guests must drive to the wedding.

In the last week from three to six suspicious characters have been arrested each day in the neighborhood of Miss Barker's cottage and escorted from the township. A woman, who was found lingering near the cottage at night was taken away by a watchman, and since then has been hiding in the woods near by.

Mrs. A. W. Goodrich confirmed the report that her daughter, Elizabeth, would not be maid of honor. She would say nothing further, and Miss Goodrich and the bridegroom refused to talk of the affair. There was no maid of honor at the wedding. Mrs. Goodrich emphatically denied that her daughter, Rosamond, is or ever has been engaged to Leicester Spaulding, brother of Howard Spaulding.

The ceremony by which the Michigan City, Ind., heiress became the wife of Mr. Spaulding was observed at 4 o'clock in the presence of more than 200 guests.

Father Bleckman, of Michigan City, performed the ceremony in the Persian Room, a sort of enclosed porch, which had been elaborately decorated. The bridal couple stood in a bower of tropical flowers, while song birds that had been cleverly concealed carolled in the foliage.

The bridal couple started to-night for British Columbia, where they will pass a week at Lake Louise. They will go to visit the Panama-Pacific Exposition and proceed to Honolulu.

Mr. Spaulding is a son of Mrs. Howard H. Spaulding, of Chicago. He was recently graduated from Yale, and for several months has been secretary to the general manager of the Haskell and Barker Car Company of Michigan City, the stock of which formed a considerable part of the Barker legacy.

The wedding is the culmination of a romance which began here several years ago, when the Barker and Spaulding cotages were only a short distance from one another. Miss Barker is 19 years old and Mr. Spaulding is 21.

Employees of the Haskell & Barker Car Company, numbering about 3,000, had a holiday to-day on account of the wedding.

Self Denial is Rare.

"The average human being does not want to live hygienically!" exclaims the editor of Clinical Medicine. And he backs up his assertion with the following:

"Once we published an account of a case of diabetes we had treated with some success. A distinguished retired army officer read it and as a consequence called upon us. We began to explain the regimen necessary when he interrupted to say: 'I don't want any diet. I want you to give me a treatment that will allow me to eat anything I want, in any quantity!' We resigned.

"Mr. Man doesn't want to stop drinking or smoking or working or playing too much. What he wants of us is the means to keep on as he has been living. Madam does not relish our advice to cut down her bridge parties, loosen her corsets and quit gorging. She wants medicine to restore her youth, take off her fat and enable her to keep it up until she has had enough.

"They all come to us, not for reform, but to be enabled to go on sinning."

A Bad Bargain.

"They say she literally bought the count, and now I guess she wishes she'd bought him on the instalment plan."

"Why so?"

"Then all she'd have to do would be to stop payments and they would take him away."—Boston Transcript.

LOCUST TREES.

They Are Very Easy to Raise and Yield Valuable Timber.

No wood is easier or more quickly grown than the common locust, and but few if any kinds of timber are more valuable to their owners at this time of need in lumber that has a commercial value.

Curiously enough locust trees will grow in almost any soil. They are easily started and can be transplanted without danger of loss. They also may be grown in out of the way or waste places where the soil is unfit for cultivation, and they grow so rapidly that in a few years a locust grove will have trees that are large enough to be made into posts for fencing or lumber for furniture or house finishing.

Locusts bear the most honey laden flower carried by any tree extensively grown in America, and where there are plenty of locusts and bees in the same community there will be a heavy yield of honey.

Locust posts have been known to remain in the ground for fencing purposes for a period of sixty years, and when removed the bark was not decayed, and the wood was almost as solid as iron.

The latest use for locust is in the manufacture of fine furniture and interior finishing of fine residences. The wood has a grain and color not found in any other timber.—New York Journal.

TWO FINE SHOTS.

They Won Fame For the Marksman as a Lion Killer.

A good story is told of a trading agent in Nyassaland. He was obsessed with a particularly real horror of lions. One of these brutes began to eat up the natives of the nearby village, doing terrible havoc. The agent barricaded himself in his room and slept with six native watchmen on duty in case the lion should try to break into his house.

One night he thought he heard the lion prowling around and promptly fired out of the window, knocking a hole in the government boat. The following morning he was astonished to see what had happened.

That night he again heard sounds which seemed to foretell the presence of the lion. He seized his rifle and fired and this time succeeded in bagging the district officer's favorite mule at the first shot.

A certain well known sportsman, who shall be nameless, was hunting in the district and heard the story. He wrote to the agent and congratulated him on shooting his first lion. The agent rose to the occasion and now silences all skeptics by producing the letter. He has since acquired quite a reputation as a lion hunter on the strength of this testimonial.—Captain W. Robert Foran in American Boy.

Birds' Eggs.

Even the same kind of bird often lays eggs that show a great difference in their marking. And often this is true of the same individual bird. At least one long, infertile egg is included in the clutch of a house sparrow, besides several eggs that are of a darker or lighter shade than each other. One may find a dozen clutches that contain some one type quite different from the rest. The tree sparrow also lays one always different from the others in the clutch. Some birds always lay an uncolored egg, such as the golden eagle, osprey and others. Some birds' eggs vary much more than others in color and markings. A result of experience shows that the following are among the common birds that lay eggs which vary considerably: Robin, linnet, rook, skylark, cuckoo, hawk and snipe.—Chicago Herald.

Two Trees.

The two navel orange trees that are the parents of all of California's millions of Washington navel trees are still alive. One of the trees is in the garden of Frank Miller's Mission inn, where it was transplanted by Theodore Roosevelt when he was president. The other is at the head of the famous Magnolia avenue at Riverside. The two trees were sent by the government to L. C. Tibbetts, a Riverside colonist, in 1873. Then followed the development of California's great navel orchards.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Now or Never In Dardanelles

Unless We Win Over Bulgaria Speedily Germans Will Rush to Aid Turks

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Discussion of the possible course liable to be taken by the Austrians and Germans after the capture of Warsaw leads the Standard today to advocate editorially that the Allies make a tremendous effort to gain Bulgaria, on the theory that a Germanic force on the south side of the Danube would overwelm Serbia, relieve Turkey, open the road to the Black Sea and the Aegean Sea for the Germans, bring about the complete discomfiture of Russia, and have the gravest effect on the fortune of the Allies.

All this would be impossible, the Standard sets forth, if the Balkan States were solidly on the side of Great Britain, Russia and France—Bulgaria being the "keystone to the arch."

"It is not at all to the credit of the Franco-British diplomacy," says the Standard, "that this question was not settled long ago. We want Bulgaria's co-operation. We have known from the beginning the price to be paid, yet while we have been talking and arguing, nothing has been accomplished and Bulgaria is losing patience and beginning to listen to the cajolements and offers of our adversaries.

"This is a sad bungling which ought to be made without further delay by business-like and straight-forward proposals. The Serbs must be told that we cannot have the issue of this war, in which we are vindicating their right to exist, jeopardized because they insist on clinging to their booty."

Germans May Crush Serbia

Military experts in London are now suggesting that instead of turning their great Galician army against the Allies in the West immediately after the fall of Warsaw, the eGrmans are much more likely to make a sudden descent on Serbia, with the object of entirely crushing and over-running the little kingdom, which would bring them to the Border of Bulgaria. A little persuasion then would certainly put Bulgaria in the German camp, which would give a clear road to Turkey, over which great German armies would be rushed to the defence of Constantinople If the Germans arrived there before the Allies, then the latter would never get there, and all the costly Dardanelles campaign would have been in vain The Black Sea would never be opened up for Russia, which would almost completely end any hope of the latter ever being able to resume the offensive in the present war.

The same experts think it necessary for the Allies to now rush their Dardanelles campaign with all possible speed.

British Prisoner Shot in Germany

Berlin Says Two Prisoners Attacked Guard; One Prisoner was Killed

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—A despatch from Halle, Prussian Saxony, to the Over Seas News Agency says that a soldier while guarding British prisoners of war who were working as garden hands, suddenly was attacked by two of the men. The guard shot and killed one of his assailants and wounded the other.

Expelled Germans Forming Colony

SEATTLE, Washington, Aug. 3.—Several hundred farmers of German birth or ancestry who were expelled from Canada on the outbreak of the war, or who fled to escape internment and have since found refuge in Seattle, Bellingham, Tacoma, and other cities of the northwest, are preparing to emigrate to New Mexico. It was announced to-day that 1,000 of them have planned a farm colony near Santa Fe, New Mexico, to be named Hindenberg, in honor of the German field marshal.

Germans for the Western Front

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 3.—The Luxembourg correspondent of the Tyd reports that 140,000 men have passed in ten days through Luxembourg on their way to the western war theatre. The correspondent adds that the soldiers did not express any enthusiasm and appeared warworn and jaded.

FREIGHTER ALEXANDRIA WRECKED OFF SCARBORO

Belleville Men in the Crew—Don Life-Belts and Leap into the Water—Gallant Rescue by Farmers and Railway Men

At 2 o'clock this (Wednesday) morning, Capt. Bloomfield, the last man to leave the meagre wreckage which remained of the steamer Alexandria, jumped and caught the life line. He was towed to safety by the life-saving crew. Three men—the Captain one deck hand and one fireman—were on the wreckage for over an hour after their comrades had all been got to safety. The life-saving crew made repeated attempts to reach them and on one occasion the lifeboat was nearly swamped, her line to the shore being broken.

Capt. Bloomfield when he was brought ashore, immediately expressed appreciation and thankfulness for the heroic work of Mr. Middleton, who swam to the overturned lifeboat with a line. Others who were engaged in the heroic work were: Reeve J. E. Cornell of Scarboro,' C. Belvan, E. W. Lafraugh and W. J. Chester. They worked the line down the cliff. Middleton was the means of saving six or seven men when he swam out with the line.

Battling hopelessly with the terrific storm which swept Lake Ontario, the stout freighter Alexandria of the Canada Steamship Lines was driven ashore at Scarboro' Heights late yesterday afternoon. She was bound from Montreal for Toronto.

Eighteen of her crew of 22 are safe—saved in a thrilling and dramatic manner during the darkness of last night. Four, including Capt. William Bloomfield, were still on the wreckage of the vessel at 1 o'clock this (Wednesday) morning.

The wreckage is lying in the breakers 200 yards out from the Scarboro' cliffs, almost opposite the terminus of the Markham road.

Early distress signals brought scores of farmers and radial railway employees to the top of the 50-foot cliff, but they had no means of reaching the pounding vessel. The surf was running too high to permit the launching of any small craft. Messages were rushed to Toronto and other points, and the local staff of the company, crews from the life-saving station and other agencies for aid were hurried to the scene.

Farmers Wade to Struggling Sailors.

Ere they arrived, however, the position of the stricken vessel grew more perilous. Its crew determined upon heroic measures. Putting on life-belts the sailors jumped from the wet decks, and set out through the breakers for shore. Their battle for life was a terrible one, even the strongest swimmers being tossed about helplessly at times. But headway was made.

Meantime the men on the cliffs were preparing to do their share. They scrambled down the high and treacherous embankment and waded out into the surf. Desperately fighting the wild waves to retain their footing and forming a chain by holding of hands, they seized the sailors one by one as they were flung almost helplessly towards the shores by the breakers. Several of the farmers were themselves thrown about by the waters, but all manfully stuck with the job till many members of the crew had been safely dragged on shore.

Climbing Steep Cliff

There is but a narrow strip of land at the bottom of the cliff and great difficulty was encountered in getting the men up. Mrs. Crew of the Half-way House was informed of the wreck and had 22 beds prepared and fires lighted in the hotel that the men might be comfortable. Later, however, a number of the rescued were taken to Toronto.

The Alexandria runs between Montreal and Toronto. Formerly it ran between Charlotte and Quebec. William Bloomfield of Kingston is master and Alex Boyd of Picton is chief engineer.

Rescued Reached Toronto

Eleven of the rescued crew arrived at the Daly House early this morning. They were all uninjured and little the worse for their experience. The first arrivals were: F. Goodall, Picton; W. Kennedy, Kingston; F. Lloyd Donnwall, Montreal; John McKeown, Montreal; Geo. Downes, Toronto; John Squiver, Picton; T. Mills and P. Purall, Dickinson's Landing; Jas. Raney, Montreal; D. Boyd and Geo. Lavelle, Kingston.

Former Passenger Vessel

The Alexandria was formerly a passenger steamer, but had carried no passengers in recent years. She came to the Canada Steamship Lines at the time of the steamship merger. Hepburn Brothers formerly owned her.

At 1 o'clock this morning the vessel was a complete wreck, fifty feet having broken away from the bow and about forty feet from the stern. The waves, dashing completely over the wreck, tumbled out her 300-ton cargo of sugar, vinegar and tomatoes into the surf. Captain Bloomfield and four men were still on the wreckage which remained. The life-saving crew had arrived, and every expectation existed that the Captain and his comrades would be rescued. The freighter is lying broadside to the cliffs about 200 yards out.

Interview With Rescued

Bravely battling against the heavy seas, with the wind behind her and the waves running from stern to bow over the boat, a hard fight was made by the crew of the Alexandria to bring her safely to Toronto, but the boat would not stand the strain, according to a statement made by a member of the crew to a press representative early htis morning at the Daly House. When about twenty miles from her destination the boat was unable to make headway and slowly drifted to her doom.

Come to City in Drenched Clothes.

When the eleven members of the crew that were brought to the Daly House at an early hour this morning were rescued there were still a number on board and the boat was breaking up fast, in fact she was nearly all gone, said the sailor. They were drenching wet had been wearing clothes in this condition for nine or ten hours and were in a pretty bad condition when they retired this morning.

Crew of the Alexandria

At three o'clock this morning the last of the Alexandria's crew were reported saved. The last taken off were Capt. Bloomfield (Kingston) and Deck Hands, W. Gibb, Toronto; Joseph Hickey, Belleville; John Hickey, Belleville; J. Slattery, Toronto; H. Lalonde, B. Lawlor, R. Law, H. O'Rourke, Harry Leaven, waiter.

Others of the crew of the Alexandria include: First Mate Tom Mills, Cornwall, Ont.; Second Mate George Downs Toronto; Chief Engineer William Boyd Picton; Second Engineer William Kennedy, Kingston; Steward Elgin Post, Belleville, Ont.; Second Cook Lewis Gengier, Rochester, N.Y.; Walter Harry Elliott, Belleville; Lookout J. McKeown, Montreal; Wheelsman F. Twaddle, Picton; Sam Scriver, Picton; T. Purtelle, Dickenson's Landing; J. Riley, Montreal; Frank Duvall, Montreal; George Lovell, Kingston. The last four named are deck hands.

Brazilian Baron Dealt With Huns

Man Shot in Domestic Quarrel Said to Have Been Traitor to Brazil

RIO JANEIRO, Aug. 3.—Baron Allemand Werther, son-in-law of the late Baron de Rio-Branco, Brazil's famous Foreign Minister, was killed last night while trying to gain possession of his children who have been living with his former wife, who obtained a divorce from him.

The divorce trial of Baroness Werther, which began in September, 1913, resulted in sensational disclosures. The Baroness declared that her husband seized important diplomatic documents belonging to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Brazil and threatened her with death when she protested. Baron Werther, she asserted, held frequent interviews with Herr Michahelles, then German Minister to Brazil. She said also that her husband communicated to the Krupps and other German firms documents referring to the defences of Brazil.

About a year before the divorce proceedings were instituted Baron Werther was shot three times by his nephew, Senhor Alcides Paranhos Silva, but his wounds were not serious.

The shooting took place at the Baron's home in Petropolis. Senhor Silva declared he mistook his uncle for a burglar.

Unknown Men Fire on Sentry

Latter Returned With Result that His Assailants Beat Hasty Retreat

FORT HENRY, Aug. 3.—A decided sensation was created around Fort Henry shortly after midnight last night when several unknown men fired on one of the sentries doing duty at the Fort. Fortunately the shots went wild and fortunately also the sentry kept his head and quite coolly levelled his rifle at his assailants, whom he thought he saw crouching behind some rocks, and returned their fire, with the result that the men, whoever they were, beat a hasty retreat and were seen no more. Whether the sentry's shot took effect is not known, but that that the men disappeared without more ado is certain.

In this connection Lt.-Col. Fee, the officer in charge of the Fort, announces that any one who ventures too near the Fort after dark, without authority or business, must be prepared to take the consequences. The authorities are determined that no nonsense from any one will be tolerated.

Constable Saves Man From Suicide

Jumps Into River and Brings Man to Pier After Much Difficulty

MONTREAL, Aug. 3.—It took all the strength and muscle of Constable St. Pierre, an athlete of something over 250 pounds to prevent one, Ferrier Grondin committing suicide by drowning last night, about 6.30 p.m. at the foot of Victoria pier.

Grondin had been roaming around the pier and had been told to go away, when he suddenly took off his overcoat and vest and jumped into the river.

Constable St. Pierre, who had not gone far was soon on the spot and with the aid of a grappling hook, but Grondin, it appears, had made up his mind not to be rescued and refused any help.

The crowd which had congregated on the spot felt aghast, thinking the man was doomed. But they had not counted on the physical resources of Constable St. Pierre, who seeing that the man was about to fulfil his design, jumped into the river himself and saved the would-be suicide by the aid of his powerful arms while swimming and keeping afloat with his legs.

In court this morning, Grondin was remanded for enquete. He will be examined as to his sanity by alienists.

RUSSIANS HOLD ENEMY DEFEAT SOME FORCES

Three Days' Fierce Fighting—German Forces Annihilated at Point of Bayonet—Enemy is Strongly Reinforced

(Canadian Press Special)

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4.—An official statement given out today by the Russian general staff says: During the last three days the enemy has made enormous efforts to dislodge us from the sector of the Narew River, from Ostrolenka to Lomza.

In the district of Jedwabno the enemy is conducting trench warfare, but in the exploding of mines we have continually held the upper hand.

On the Pissa and Skwa Rivers the enemy attacked us, having first launched against us reinforcements brought from France. Nevertheless we soon saw a complete German defeat in this sectod, for it took the enemy a week to drive back from the village of Serwatka, on the right bank of the Pissa, our rearguard regiment, while the battle for the passage of the Narew, near Novogoro, has not even begun.

Near the mouth of the Skwa the enemy, thanks to forests, succeeded in passing to our side of the river, but we successfully prevented him from bringing his artillery across the Narew and at the point of the bayonet we annihilated some forces which were deprived of the protection of their artillery.

These failures compelled the enemy to withdraw from this sector the reinforcements which had come from France and send them to reinforce the Rozan army, which was moving more rapidly.

This army was considerably strengthened by other reinforcements, which came to it from the left bank of the Vistula. Nevertheless all efforts of the enemy to make progress to the east and west were broken by the River Oje.

The enemy then changed the direction of his attack, and now on a front between the Narew and the Oje is making great efforts to advance in a [illegible]stern direction behind Ostrolenka.

During the three days of fighting the enemy repeatedly hurled large masses of infantry against our trenches, but while suffering severe losses he advanced only two or three versts (1.8 miles)

On August 2nd our troops, during a particularly desperate German attack which we repulsed, saw the enemy's cavalry caught by his own infantry who had been thrown back with the intention of forcing them to attack us again. The German losses were very heavy.

In the southern sector of the battle, near the village of Polishivnitca, the enemy concentrated a large mass of infantry in order to pass across the valley of the Oje, but our artillery smothered his attack at the end of the valley, forcing the Germans in this region to disperse.

Our losses were very heavy, but our troops are making a valiant resistance to the enemy's plan to deal a severe blow to deal from the Narew line on the rear of the Russian armies which are impeding Field Marshal von Mackensen's offensive in the Viepra valley.

DOCTOR BADLY BURNED WHEN OIL EXPLODED

Was Making Adjustments Under His Automobile When Explosion Occurred

MONTREAL, Aug. 3.—Dr. E. Lalonde of Bourdeaux, had a narrow escape from death at an early hour today while he was under his automobile on the road between Terrebonne and St. Rose.

The doctor had just filled the tank with gasoline and was under the machine making some adjustments when something exploded and set fire to the auto. Dr. Lalonde was badly burned about the face and hands and had to be brought to the Hotel Dieu Hospital.

Mrs. Lalonde, who had been accompanying her husband on the trip was out of the machine at the time and escaped.

While Dr. Lalonde's condition is considered serious, hopes are entertained by the medical men of the institution for his recovery.

ENGLISH ARE VICTORIOUS IN THRILLING AIR FIGHT

Sergt, Spafford Describes Interesting Encounter—Tells of the Belleville Boys at the Front—Makes an Appeal For Tobacco

On the Firing Line,
Belgium, July 16, 1915.

Dear Mr. Bowell,—Since my return from leave in England I find I have a little time at my disposal, and I herewith record a brief description of a phase of this new mode of warfare which I trust will prove of interest to the readers of The Intelligencer.

Britons throughout our great Empire sing with pride "The Soldiers of the King' 'and "Rule Britannia." We are justified in our pride as history shows. Our Wellington and Wolfe, whose glorious exploits at Waterloo and on the Plains of Abraham illuminate the pages of history, are an inspiration to our boyhood; and has not history repeated itself in the present war?

Our Nelson and Drake were men who with inferior ships and amazing odds won for us the respect of all nations on the high seas. Today we point with pride to our navy—and we can truthfully sing "Britannia rules the waves"—all nations realize this.

Thus the conquest of the air began. We have followed with interest the progress of this conquest since the inception of the balloon, which we treated more as a curiosity than as a mode of travel of practical value. We were in a way justified in this. If we but search our memory we recollect the clumsy, uncontrollable gas bag that shot towards the clouds, and after reaching a certain height a bespangled figure, clinging to a trapeze, cut loose and, by means of a parachunt, descended to the earth, having no choice of how or where to land.

Then came the aeroplane. Much speculation and doubt were prevalent as to its ultimate success. Pessimistic minds pooh-poohed the idea. Still the wildest dreams of man have come true, and today we find that they are a startling reality. Man has conquered the air, and like a soaring bird, goes and comes at will.

Today we find, owing to the existence of aircraft and aeroplanes, the tactics of warfare have assumed a new and interesting phase. No longer do troops engaged in this great game of war dash into action in open places as in the days of our grandfathers, as with artillery and cavalry; nor do infantry take up a position only under cover of darkness, for far above them may be soaring, like a watchful hawk looking for prey, an aeroplane, hidden beneath a friendly cloud. Its observers, with powerful glasses observe every movement that takes place. The country below appears like a gigantic map. Well back in the enemy's line are posted watchful observers, who record by means of signals employed by the airmen every movement that transpires. Before them they have maps that have the most minute details registered, regarding roads, hedges, buildings, railways, etc. Heavy guns are in communication by means of telephone or telegraph, and in a moment's notice one can drop shells accurately on any point within their range.

Another method is employed by aeroplane which is very interesting. Wireless stations are installed at certain points near batteries. The aeroplane by this means communicates information, and observes the effect of the fire, directing the guns until their target has been located.

The reader will see the necessity of caution and the great care artillery officers must exercise in effectually concealing their batteries. Various methods are employed for concealment, which you no doubt have read about.

You will also realize the necessity of our boys remaining like rabbits in their dugouts all day long when aircraft are busy. Only under cover of darkness do we move around with impunity. Look-out men are constantly on the alert when we are in action. Should the flash of our guns be ob-

25 Lives Lost In Erie Flood

Dams Break Following Cloudburst and Large Section of City Was Inundated

ERIE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Twenty-five lives lost as estimated by the police, milions of dollars in property damage and the city in total darkness tonight, is the result of a cloudburst shortly after six o'clock to-night that culminated in a flood that inundated a large portion of the city.

The business part of the city was flooded to a depth of five feet. Many houses were washed from foundations, while the water reached the second storey of others.

The heavy precipitation caused dams south of the city to burst, letting out a flood of water that filled the main business streets to a depth of five feet, and in some sections reaching to the second storey windows of dwellings. Among the first plants to northeastern direction behind Ostro-County Electric Co., which supplied the city with light. Then The Erie Despatch, a morning paper, whose building adjoins the electric light plant, was flooded, and all idea of getting out a morning paper was abandoned until midnight, when the staff was moved to the plant of The Erie Times.

In the meantime the first bulletin of the flood was sent to the outside world by the Associated Press operator, who waded in water up to his arm-pits to the Western Union Office, a distance of five blocks, and there sent out his story of the flood.

Has there not yet flashed upon the German mind the vision of what this great world war now stands for—that is, the crusade of civilized nations against the conspiring enemies of peace, a gigantic police action to put two dangerous known criminals into a condition where they are unable to do any more harm?—Corriere della Sera, Milan.

Kaiser Wilhelm, on the anniversary of the war, calls upon God to witness that he did not will it. Perhaps he hopes to shift the blame upon poor old Francis Joseph. But it is in vain that Wilhelm pleads Not Guilty.. The civilized world has long been in possession of the evidence, and its verdict has already been pronounced—Hamilton Herald.

Toronto Fair Best on Record

Directors Planning Programme on Scale Commensurate With a Record Attendance

There was never a time in the thirty-seven years of its history when the Canadian National Exhibition promised more real instruction and entertainment than this year. In addition to the marvelous proofs of the manner in which the patriot at home is taking care of his responsibilities in the way of increased production that the pa-front may have the wherewithal to keep his place in the battle line, there will be special features of patriotic and historic significance.

The big war spectacle in front of the Grand Stand will be quite the most elaborate pageant ever presented by the Fair, while the Model Military Camp, aeroplane flights and the mining and torpedoing of ships in the harbor, supplemented by the war trophies will be a revelation.

The new Giant Midway, with its army of spielers, never presented a more diversified list of attractions, while the Hippodrome and Circus in front of the Grand Stand will be a triumph in the amusement line. The Fair this year in all departments promises to excell any previous one ever held at Toronto.

The Directors are looking forward to a repetition of the "Million Year" and are planning their programme on a scale to fit this immense attendance.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

The big boys and the smaller boys were out to camp have all returned. Most of the fellows came in to the buildings on their return to get weighed. Every fellow, including the worry man had added to his weight. No wonder! When the youngsters were out there they used amongst a thousand other things (more or less), over four hundred quarts of milk. Think of it. They were so hearty and vigorous that the Physical Director to get out of their way went to Toronto with his wife for two or three days.

Mr. Gifford has gone wih Mr. C. R. Powers, Physical Director of Kingston Y.M., to the Summer School for leaders at Lake Couchiching. There is a fine school there this summer. Included in the faculty are: Prof. H. H. Horne, Ph. D., New York University, New York; Prof. I. C. Matthews, Ph.D., McMaster University, Toronto; Chas. W. Bishop National Secretary, Toronto; C. M. Copeland, Territorial Secretary, Toronto; Harry Ballantyne, Territorial Secretary, Calgary; R. R. Blackney, Education Secretary, Buffalo, N.Y.; J. Bradford, Community Secretary, Montreal; J. M. Dudley, National Railroad Secretary, Montreal; A. S. McAlister, Territorial Secretary, Halifax; A. S. Morgan, Railroad Secretary, Schreiber, Ont.; Dr. J. Brown, Jr., International Committee, New York; Dr. J. B. Modisette, Physical Director, Montreal; Fred J. Smith, Physical Director, Toronto; P. J. Lee, Physical Director, Toronto; T. W. Stafford, Physical Director, Toronto; Fred W. Young, Swimming Instructor, Toronto; Ed. Burford, Pianist, Toronto; Taylor Stratten, National Boys' Work Secretary, Toronto; T. H. He came home to attend his father's obsequies and was taken ill shortly after. He was unmarried. Deceased was a member of the Tabernacle Methodist church. Surviving is a mother, who is ill in the hospital here, three brothers and four sisters. The brothers are Clayton, Percy and Garnet of this city, and the sisters are Mrs. C. Martin, of Calgary, Mrs. H. Wallace of Westport, Misses Hattie and Carmeletta of this city. To the bereaved ones will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of many friends.

American Women Prepare for War

Leading Society Women are Urging Preparedness in Relief Work

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—The Special Relief Society, of which Mrs. William Alexander of this city is the president, announced to-day the beginning of a campaign "To arouse women of America to a full realization of immediate preparedness for war." The society, it was stated, has undertaken to complete at once a nation-wide organization of women to consider and to act upon questions of preparedness.

Several of the members of the society have offered the use of their summer homes to the government for hospital purposes and the society hopes to increase this list of volunteer hospitals. A list of sewing clubs which may be called upon to prepare garments needed in the field is being prepared. Lists of volunteers for war relief work in this country and a registry of nurses who will be available for field and hospital work are being compiled.

Members of the general committee of the Special Relief Society include Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Wm. Rockefeller, Mrs. Geo. Gould, Mrs. Chas. Mr. Oelrichs, and Mrs. John A. Logan.

MANIFESTO APPROVED

BERLIN, Aug. 3.A(By wireless to Sayville.—In a statement given out today the Overseas News Agency says:

"The entire German press has approved with enthusiasm the proclamation given out by Emperor William on the anniversary of the outbreak of the war and published yesterday. It united in pointing out that every word in this statement breathes his accustomed high-minded seriousness.

"The conviction of Emperor William that the entire German nation is animated by a firm resolution to secure a lasting peace, thus opening the road for an unparalleled national development, is shared by all the people. Yesterday the people went to church and thanked the Almighty for the blessings of the past year and prayed for a speedy ending of the fearful struggle.

"Newspapers point out particularly that the plan to starve an entire nation of 80,000,000 men, women and children has been frustrated by the careful organization of all resources."

SCHOOL GIRL SUICIDES

PATTERSON, N.J., Aug. 3.—Last Friday night 14-year-old Elizabeth Garrity, a high school student, who lived with her uncle and aunt, received a visit from her widowed mother who lives in another part of the town. The girl had not lived with her mother since she was fourteen months old, but her mother made frequent visits and exercised considerable supervision over her. On Friday Mrs. Garrity found tucked under her daughter's mattress a postal card signed "Eugene," which told that the writer was going away for a vacation and gave his address. Mrs. Garrity upbraided her daughter severely for having anything to do with boys at her age and the girl was morose after her mother left.

The next morning she was still gloomly and her aunt ordered her sharply to sweep out the dining-room. Her aunt then went into another part of the house and when she returned the girl was gone. The police were notified that she was missing and yesterday morning detectives found her body in the Passaic River.

NO SAVAGERY IS TOO GREAT FOR GERMANS

PARIS, August 3.—The commission presided over by Georges Payelle, president of the French Court of Accounts, has presented to Premier Viviani the final report of its investigations into action on the part of German soldiers in violation of the rights of man. This report contains 12,000 words, and gives in detail the evidence gathered concerning the use by German troops of military and civilian prisoners as shields against the fire of French troops, as well as of the employment by the troops of Emperor William of cartridges in which the bullets were reversed in order to cause more serious wounds—split bullets, and other bullets cut to make them more rending.

Continuing the report cites orders given by General Stenger, commander of the Fifty-eighth German Brigade, ordering his soldiers to kill the wounded enemy and to take no more prisoners. Evidence confirming the issuing and the circulation of this order was obtained from German prisoners belonging to the 112th and 142nd Regiments. The report contains also evidence of the massacre of French soldiers as a result of this order, as well as the massacre of wounded men after the battle of Fethe, in Belgium. It presents the allegations of many individual soldiers who declare they saw their wounded comrades put to death by a rifle shot, a revolver shot, the thrust of a bayonet, or a blow from the butt of a musket by German soldiers, subaltern officers and officers. Some of the French witnesses testified that they themselves had been objects of such aggressive attacks after having been wounded, and that they had survived.

The report devotes considerable space to allegations of the inhumanity of the Germans to British prisoners of war, which, it says, is proven by the evidence of the victims. Many prisoners of war have been shot, while others have had their skulls crushed by blows from the butt of a musket. At St. Die thirty French prisoners were assassinated in this manner by Bavarian troops.. The truth of this is vouched for by five men who actually witnessed the executions. Other men who appeared before the commission had found the dead bodies of a French patrol numbering seven men, an infantry corporal and six privates with their hands tied behind their backs and dead from rifle shots. This incident was further supported by evidence taken before a justice of the peace.

The report concludes with three columns of evidence to prove the bombarding of ambulances by the Germans; the firing upon stretcher-bearers, and the taking prisoners of surgeons.

In some cases, it is set forth, French surgeons were arrested by German surgeons, and by them sent to the rear to be interned.

Several cases are cited in which German wounded, succored by Frenchmen, are alleged to have taken the opportunity to kill those going to their relief.

Rev. J. S. Averman, in the German church at Tarentum, Pa., prayer for rain to fall on Sunday boaters who disturbed his discouse.

Heavy Storm of Wind and Rain

Highest Wind and Most Continuous Downpour of Rain Known for Years

Yesterday's storm of wind and rain which broke over the city and vicinity about the noon hour proved to be one of irresistible force and has left in its wake a trail of some damage. In the country district the storm was felt with full force, and many inhabitants were free to confess it was one of the worst storms ever seen at this season of the year. As a result considerable damage was done to outstanding crops especially oats and corn, which were flattened by the high wind and downpour of rain. The rain fell in torrents and was carried in sheets by a strong gale, which prevailed. In various sections of the county telephone and telegraph communications were interrupted. In the city the storm was none the less severe, and was especially felt by pedestrians, who were compelled to be about. Drivers of vehicles also experienced much discomfort. In some sections of the city water ran from off the street across the walks.

In some districts much concern is felt for fall wheat, the storm coming at a time when there was much to be garnered, in addition to what had already been cut and left out in the fields. In some parts of the county trees were levelled by the wind and not a few trees lost a number of stout limbs. Creeks were today filled, which previous to yesterday were virtually dry. During today rain fell in considerable quantities, but the wind had subsided. Whilst damage has been done much good will result by the downpour to root crops and pasture.

NO INTELLIGENCER

An explanation is due our town readers for the non-appearance of The Intelligencer yesterday. The fault was not ours. The breakdown in the electric service occurred shortly before 4 o'clock, when our pages were on the machine ready for printing. Without electric power we could do nothing but wait. The Trenton Electric Coy. officials could give us no definite information as to when the defect would be remedied; and the machine staff were kept waiting for the expected brilliant flash until nearly half-past ten, when all hopes of printing the paper last night were abandoned. It transpires that it was nearly midnight before power was switched on again to our circuit.

We are informed by the manager that the breakdown was absolutely unavoidable, and that every effort was made to repair the break. Although a hurricane was blowing the linemen were up the poles, working their hardest. The cause of the trouble was, of course, the hurricane, breaks in the local primary system occurring in fifteen different parts of the city. The centre of the city was all right, but Charles and Alexander, Forin and Ann streets, being one of the highest points of the city, were most effected by the hurricane. The Intelligencer Office happens to be in this circuit. We regret the inconvenience to which our readers were subjected, but it will be seen that it was quite unavoidable. The Intelligencer was published shortly after eight o'clock this morning.

Storm Notes

The storm caused considerable damage on the Kingston Road, from Oshawa eastward, and a great deal of inconvenience to autoists travelling on that thoroughfare.

Owing to the fact that the streams and creeks were greatly swollen and small bridges and culverts carried away, (one small bridge is down at Grafton and two at Salem), automobile parties had to take refuge in hotels and proceed to their destination by train, leaving their automobiles in garages.

The rain was exceptionally heavy between six and eight o'clock last evening, and it has continued to fall, almost uninterruptedly for 27 hours. It is an exceptionally heavy downpour, and it is a pity that no official record of rain is kept in Belleville.

Elevator Boy Had Head Crushed

Met Terrible Death When Elevator Caught Him at Factory

MONTREAL, Aug. 2—With his head crushed between the floor and the elevator in the tent department of the factory of the Smart-Woods Company, Limited, 800 Mullins street, Point St. Charles, at 11 o'clock to-day, Gaston Pattenaud, elevator boy, 17 years old, 963 Berard street, met a terrible death.

The victim's head was crushed almost to a pulp and when Dr. Morrison, of the Western Hospital arrived life was extinct.

Young Pattenaud was standing on the second flat of the factory. The elevator was on the third floor. He pulled the rope and while he was looking down the elevator shaft the car descended quicker that he expected and pinned his head beneath the floor and the car. His head and shoulders were frightfully mangled.

As soon as the accident was discovered a hurry-up call was sent to the Western Hospital for an ambulance and a doctor, but the victim was beyond medical aid.

The body was taken to the Morgue where Coroner McMahon after hearing the evidence of his comrades, decided that it was unnecessary to summon a jury. A verdict of accidental death was recorded.

MARRIES MRS. WALTERS

Woman Charged With Murder of Her Two Children

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Fulfilling predictions which have been current ever since their two children were found poisoned in an East 167th street flat one day last winter, Ida Sniffon Walters and Lorlys Elton Rogers were married in Jersey City yesterday. The wedding took place in the office of I. Faber Goldenhorn, a lawyer at No. 15 Exchange place.

Mrs. Walters has been living at Suffern, N.Y., since her release from the Bronx County Jail in $2,500 bail on a charge of murdering her two children.

Rogers is a practising attorney of this city. Two indictments were returned against him as a result of investigations made into the mystery surrounding the poisoning, both under the so-called white slave act.

Mrs. Caroline Giddings Rogers on July 29 was divorced from Rogers.

Mrs. Walters does not give her maiden name in her application. She states that she is thirty-four years old, and lives at Suffern, N.Y. She says she was divorced from Arthur F. Falters on June 8, 1912, Edward E. McCall, Supreme Court Justice granting the decree.

Rogers also gives his address as Suffern and says he is forty-four years of age.

Last December Mrs. Walters admitted she had administered the poison to her children and to herself. The children died in the Fordham Hospital but she recovered. Upon her recovery she was indicted by the Bronx County grand jury for murder in the first degree.

Last May Abraham Levy, attorney for Mrs. Walters, endeavored to have her brought to trial, the date being fixed by Justice Brady, but Justice Weeks refused to permit the case to be tried until after the child was born. District Attorney Martin was willing to have the woman admitted to bail.

Following the murder charge Rogers' wife consented to release her husband and sought a divorce.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Six more recruits from Belleville have been received by the 8th C. M. R.

Major Barragar is conducting the lectures of the provisional school of Infantry. The class is not as large as originally expected.

The allotment of the 150 horses which the 8th C. M. R. received on Sunday morning began yesterday. The last lot of horses are much heavier in build than the horses received a week ago, and would be better suited to transport work or to field artillery than to cavalry.

Lieut. P. H. Wright and Lieut. T. P. Dennison of the 8th C. M. R. have been selected to accompany the draft which the Mounted Rifles will send overseas shortly. When it was known that another draft was to be sent from the regiment, every man was an applicant for a place, and urged his claims to consideration. The 8th C. M. R. had just recruited the regiment up to strength, when the order came for another draft.

Captain Partridge brought in yesterday eleven recruits for the 59th Battalion from Gananoque. When the recruits left the factory town a big crowd of citizens gave them a demonstration and made them feel that the step they were taking was appreciated by their fellow citizens. More recruits are expected from the town of Gananoque.

The following sergeants have been selected by Lt.-Col. Dawson to accompany the draft for overseas which the battalion has been asked to supply: Co. Sergeant-Major Lewis, Sergeants Ryan, Gramman, Cavely, O'Connell, Tattersall, Burns, Agombar. The following eight corporals have been selected for the draft of the 59th battalion: Corporals Ashley, La Coste, Cousins, Nash, Stewart, Roe, Armstrong, Simpson. In addition to these 233 men will go with the draft.

THE ATTACK ON MR. ROGERS

Since the Manitoba investigation began, the Liberals have resumed their covert attacks on Mr. Rogers, Minister of Public Works. He has not been inculpated in any manner, shape or form; not a tittle of evidence affecting his good name has been offered or elicited, nevertheless the Liberal press is striving to make the outside public believe that he is smirched. The theory seems to be that because he was a member of the Roblin Administration some years ago, before a breath of scandal had touched it, therefore he must have been implicated in any rascality that may have since taken place, the entire absence of proof counting for nothing because by a law of nature all Tories are corrupt.

As a matter of fact it has not been shown that Sir Rodmond Roblin or any colleague of his ever received a dishonest dollar for Kelly; and not a shadow of a stain has fallen upon Mr. Rogers. But apparently because they have hunted in vain for well on to four years to find traces of crookedness on his part in the Interior and Public Works Departments, the Liberal sleuths are making a last stand on the Manitoba story and hope by a fresh deluge of lying to destroy his reputation. It is a cruel as well as a cowardly campaign. Fortunately for himself, Mr. Rogers is not a man to be terrorized by slandermongers and the fiercer he is assailed the higher under such circumstances he stands in the estimation of friends and decent-minded opponents.

It is no secret that the daily reports of the Winnipeg enquiry have been prepared by a prejudicial news agency. The worst has been told, the redeeming parts withheld. In Manitoba itself the truth is pretty well known; and the resolute action of the Conservatives in dismissing their former leaders and calling for the punishment of the guilty, whoever they may be, has greatly enhanced their credit with the people. Mr. Rogers is lending them a hand in the campaign, which may prove a surprise for the Liberals. The Conservatives, to say the least, will be a strong Opposition under a good leader with capable lieutenants. Mr. Norris is expected to do wonders for Sir Wilfrid's side when the Federal election comes round, but in all probability Mr. Rogers will sweep the province, first, because the Conservative cause will no longer be embarrassed by the weakness of the Roblin Cabinet, and secondly, because the Borden Administration is popular in the West, whilst Mr. Rogers, its indefatigable wheelhorse, has a larger and more enthusiastic following than ever before.

SIR WILFRID'S SUCCESSOR.

The report that Sir Lomer Gouin is to succeed Sir Wilfrid as Liberal leader in the Dominion is probably untrue. Sir Wilfrid has been leader since 1887, that is, for nearly 30 years, and his English-speaking followers think they should be allowed to choose his successor. Sir Lomer has had a tolerably long career in Quebec politics, and for a man of mediocre ability has filled important positions. He has no special acquaintance with Dominion affairs and would not be at home among the dour old Grits of Ontario, who to this day dislike "French domination."

Mr. George Graham, Sir Wilfrid's first lieutenant, is considered too light for leader, and Mr. Fielding too heavy, added to which his habit of never doing today what he can contrive to put off till next week or next year rendered him unpopular when Finance Minister, especially among the office-seekers. The ablest man on the Liberal side is undoubtedly Mr. William Pugsley, but he has changed his coat so often that the rank and file in Ontario have no great confidence in him. Mr. E. M. Macdonald of Pictou is a good debater but is tied up with corporations and scarcely conceals his protectionist views, whereas the head of the party must be a free-trader in theory if not at heart.

But before Sir Wilfrid's shoes are filled it will surely be necessary to find a platform. There has been no national convention since 1893, and not one of the planks then adopted remains to tell the tale. Mr. N. W. Rowell, who has been a failure in Ontario, is talked of as Federal leader by the narrower sort of Liberals. He stars at camp-meetings but somehow or other is not cut out for Parliament and would make a particularly poor impression in Quebec. Everyone wishes Sir Wilfrid long life, but he is now in his 74th year and has been in the Legislature or in the House at Ottawa since 1871, in addition to spending 15 arduous years as Premier, when he made shipwreck of all the principles he used to advocate and stood forth as an opportunist pure and simple.

A VICTIM OF THE WAR.

The Journal of Commerce, of Montreal, of which the Hon. W. S. Fielding was Editor-in-Chief, ceased to be published as a daily paper on July 31st, and will be continued in its original form of a weekly financial paper. The Journal is a victim of the war, for it made its appearance as a daily about the time that the war commenced; and it has been found impossible to continue a daily issue. The outside public has no conception of the serious effect which the war has had upon newspapers generally. Many Canadian papers have gone down entirely under the strain, and have ceased

We regret the demise of the daily issue of the Journal of Commerce, for we regarded it as one of the most interesting publications which came into The Intelligencer office. Financial papers as a rule are only of interest to a few, but the Journal of Commerce contained many features of interest to the ordinary reader. Its editorial page was brightly written, and its tone was high, fair and patriotic. If it should ultimately be decided to revert again to a daily issue we hope the Journal—on its second venture—will meet with the success it undoubtedly deserved.

CURRENT COMMENT

A significant sidelight on the progress of the war is given in Canada's relaxation of the physical standard for recruits.

French marines also have been landed at Port-au-Prince. There could, of course, be no objection to them guarding their own legation if they desire.

A coalition ministry for Japan is probable. Japan still feels herself sufficiently involved in the war to make the sinking of political quarrels patriotic.

The talk that is beginning to come from Russia about friendly relations with Japan looks as if the thought of calling on a Japanese army for assistance may be developing.

Emperor William says that he did not will this war and that no lust of conquest inspired it. That might be more convincing if he put himself behind the proposition of the Social-Democrats to offer peace on a no-conquest basis. Why doesn't he?—Buffalo Express.

Asquith in the House of Commons uses the phrase "the freedom of the seas," meaning no more or less than the freedom all the nations enjoyed for a hundred years prior to the unsuccessful attempt to break down international law. That sort of freedom of the seas was satisfactory to everybody and all nations thrived under it.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The German navy will soon be forced to fight—when it will either surrender or be annihilated; and the German army will soon be out of France and Belgium. We do not say that three weeks will see these things done; but we do say that we shall then be in a position to do them. The rest is for Lord Kitchener and the military and naval strategists to determine.—John Bull, July 17.

Though the news comes to them in a furtive, disjointed fashion, the Australian people are learning for the first time what war really is; and, bitter as the lesson may be, they are realizing how needful it is to make that preparation for defence which is the best guarantee against attack. The letters now coming from Gallipoli afford dramatic illustration of war's monstrous horrors and the supreme test of endurance the enemy imposed. Our men have fought bravely. They have also suffered cruelly. And their deaths and wounds emphasize with tragic force how fundamental is the duty of Australians to so order their national life as to keep the grim monster of battle away.—Sydney Bulletin.

It is an insult to the cob to cut the corn from it with a knife, but none of the teachers of dining etiquet have ever found a graceful way to hold it in the fist and gnaw it off.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Whatever Canada's immediate future may be, the larger future is hers, and it is bright. In no event can Canada prosper too richly for our satisfaction. We of the United States must not only appreciate our neighbor's effective patriotism, but must strive also to bring about even more friendly relations, and, in banking and commerce, relations increasingly profitable to both sets of Americans. Neglect of Canadian markets and Canadian sympathies forms one of the least creditable chapters in the history of American protectionism; but the time for us to ignore or to patronize Canada—if there ever was such a time—has now gone by.—Colliers.

In his (Botha's) complete victory is the climax of one of the most amazing romances in the history of the British world state. It happens to mark the close, or almost the close, of the terrible chapter of Germany's humiliations as a colonizing power. Togoland and Cameroon are gone; German New Guinea, the Solomon, Caroline, Pellew, Marianne and Marschall islands are gone; Samoa is gone; Kaio-Chau is gone. Of all the million square miles of Germany's overseas empire there now remains only German East Africa, blockaded by the British fleet and invaded by British troops, who will not leave it until their task is done. Very marvelous is the work of British sea power, and yet more marvelous the imperial tradition and practice which has led to the turning of Louis Botha's sword against the would-be destroyers of the British name.—London Daily Telegraph.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

Canadians as a whole have given such proof of bitter animosity to Germany that they must not be surprised if henceforth every effort is made to prevent the further influx into their land of the virile stream of German manhood.—Tagliche Rundschau.

We make England a present most ungrudgingly of the whole noble band of newly-made citizens who have been evolved from the wretched human material which formerly masqueraded as Germans. We leave the English to regard the gift as a consolation prize in view of their colossal losses in the field.—Die Post.

The Poets' Corner

A HYMN OF EMPIRE.

(By Frederick George Scott.)

Canon Scott, of Quebec, poet, priest and soldier, is now with our forces "somewhere in France."

Lord, by whose might the Heavens stand,
The Source from whence they came,
Who holdest nations in Thy hand,
And call'st the stars by name,
Thine ageless forces do not cease
To mould us as of yore—
The chiselling of the arts of peace,
The anvil strokes of war.

Then bind our realm in brotherhood,
Firm laws and equal rights,
Let each uphold the Empire's good
In freedom that unites;
And make that speech whose thunders roll
Down the broad stream of time,
The harbinger from pole to pole
Of love and peace sublime.

Lord, turn the hearts of cowards who prate,
Afraid to dare or spend,
The doctrine of a narrower State
More easy to defend;
Not this the watchword of our sires
Who breathed with ocean's breath,
Not this our spirit's ancient fires
Which nought could quench but death.

Strong are we? Make us stronger yet;
Great? Make us greater far,
Our feet antarctic oceans fret,
Our crown the polar star:
Round Earth's wild coasts our batteries speak,
Our highway is the main,
We stand as guardian of the weak,
We burst the oppressor's chain.

Great God, uphold us in our task,
Keep pure and clean our rule,
Silence the honeyed words which mask
The wisdom of the fool.

The pillars of the world are Thine;
Pour down Thy bounteous grace,
And make illustrious and divine
The sceptre of our race.

CANADA AT WAR

HON. MR. WHITE PLACES LOAN IN NEW YORK FOR $40,000,000

Preparing In Advance For Requirements of the Future.

Success Proves That Canada's Credit Remains Unimpaired.

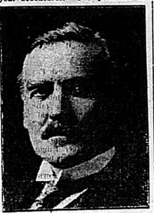
CANADA'S largest loan and the first ever floated in New York was successfully negotiated by Hon. W. T. White last week. The new loan has been placed by the Bank of Montreal, acting as fiscal agents for the Dominion of Canada, with J. P. Morgan & Co., Brown Bros. & Co., the First National Bank of New York and the National City Bank of New York, while the Bank of Montreal has also associated itself with them in the purchase.

Great Financial Coup.

From every quarter Hon. W. T. White is being congratulated on the success of this great financial operation. It is claimed, and is justly so, that it is the cleverest financial coup ever sponsored by a Canadian finance minister. Canada has entered new financial markets, secured ample funds for all domestic purposes, relieved the London market from any additional burden and made certain the successful financing of the marketing of our great crop. So well kept was the secret that Canada was invading the Wall Street market that the negotiations were completed and the loan placed before even a rumour reached the public.

Form of Flotation.

Of the Canadian flotation in New York $25,000,000 was of one-year 5 per cent. notes at par and $15,000,000 of two-year 5 per cent. notes at 99½ with option to holders of each to convert into 5 per cent. twenty-year debentures. The proceeds of these securities, approximately $40,000,000 after the expenses of the issue are deducted, will provide for the capital expenditures of the Dominion during the current year upon undertakings now under construction in Canada.



HON. W. T. WHITE.

Why Placed in New York.

The considerations which influenced the making of the new short date issues in New York were as follows:

(1) Relief to the amount of the loan will be given to the London market which is the source of the Imperial borrowings from which the war expenditure of the Empire (including Canada) is financed.

(2) By borrowing in New York rather than in London the exchange situation, now so greatly against the latter, will be benefited.

(3) A loan of such a large amount effected in New York should tend to improve exchange conditions between Canada and the United States, exchange at present being strongly in favor of the latter.

(4) Having regard to the loss in exchange (amounting to one and one-half per cent.) in transferring funds from London to New York, which is the Canadian exchange centre, the rate of interest paid on the New York loan is as advantageous as the rate at which a similar loan could be placed in London. Payment for the securities being in New York funds, the Dominion gets the benefit of the existing premium on New York exchange in transferring the proceeds of the loan to Canada.

Necessity of Loan.

At the outbreak of the war Hon W. T. White arranged with the British authorities to market Canadian securities in London to finance our war expenditure. This arrangement still holds good, and the present loan is not for war purposes. Great Britain has had to husband her financial resources to meet the terrific burden not only of her own war expenditures, but also of her allies, and for this reason flotations on the London market for other purposes were discouraged. Canada is carrying on a great programme of public improvements which entails a very heavy capital expenditure.

Greatly Commended.

"On this account," says Mr. Meredith, President of the Bank of Montreal, "the Minister of Finance, Hon. Mr. White, is to be congratulated on the discretion and sound judgment he has shown in effecting this sale and obtaining the money on such highly satisfactory terms. In addition, the Imperial Treasury and London market is freed from the necessity of financing the Dominion, and this should prove very acceptable at a time when the Mother Country has so much to look after in both directions. The uncertainty that prevails and the difficulty of forecasting the conditions which will obtain in London from now on makes the action of the Dominion Government one which entitles it to the special commendation of the country."

Effects of Loan.

It is believed that the success of this financial operation will restore complete confidence in Canadian commercial, financial, and industrial circles. Canada's expenditure both for war and domestic purposes is now assured for a year. While owing to the precautionary financial measures taken in August last by the Finance Minister the banks were never in a stronger position, yet the influx of this great amount of money will give an absolute guarantee of ample funds to finance the crops. It will also enable the Government to continue its great programme of public works under construction and guarantee continuous work to thousands.

No New Undertakings.

Speaking of the New York loan of forty millions, the Minister of Finance emphasized the point that its proceeds were to be used for the capital expenditures of the Dominion upon works and undertakings actually under construction. It was not intended to vary the policy of the Government enunciated in the two budget speeches since the outbreak of war, viz., that during the existing critical financial conditions no new public works would be undertaken.

Successful and Prudent.

In placing this loan at the present time Hon. Mr. White has taken advantage of the premium on New York exchange, and by this means has saved the entire cost of placing the issue. Since he became head of the treasury his great object has always been to keep the Dominion financially strong, and he has been successful through the trying period of trade disruption. At the outbreak of the war his wise precautions prevented panic or even fear in financial circles.

The Critics Answered.

A small section of the public press has offered some criticism, claiming the interest rate is too high. To such it might be pointed out that Imperial Government securities which formerly sold on a two and a half per cent. basis are now on a four and a half. French Government notes issued on a five per cent. basis in New York are at a substantial discount. The old favorite Dominion Government three and a half per cent. standard security (1930-50) is now quoted in the London market at the nominal figure of eighty-two, the 1940-60 fours at ninety-two, and the last four and a half per cent. issue at ninety-six. This issue was oversubscribed by ten million dollars in March last.

Decline in Standards.

The causes for these great declines in the price of the standard securities of Great Britain, France, and Canada are all the same, viz., the war which has caused the outpouring upon the international markets of the world of tens of billions of dollars of the national securities of belligerent Governments. The quotations of these securities reflect the view of the investment public and of the international banking community as to the vast amount of securities of this class which will have been issued before the end of the war. After the conclusion of peace international markets will be for many years engaged with the financial task of funding short-date maturities and temporary borrowings of Governments. It is the object of Governments at present to make permanent issues when possible so that after the war is over they may not be confronted with heavy liabilities maturing within a short space of time which would embarrass their financing during the period of reconstruction following the war.

No Immediate Domestic Loan.

It has also been suggested that a domestic flotation was possible and this would have avoided the necessity of going to Wall Street. It has been pointed out that Canada could not afford to withdraw from the business community at the present time such a large sum. Our great crop must be financed—a domestic loan would have decreased our resources for this work, while a foreign loan assists. Again, the opportunity to secure money in New York might not be open in a few months. If that country should become embroiled in the conflict the United States Government would require and secure all the available capital in that country for such investments. Having provided for our domestic requirements by the New York loan, he has the Canadian money market to turn to if the war expenditure requires a Canadian flotation. Mr. White by his New York flotation has provided for our capital expenditure on public works, increased our financial resources to market the crop, relieved the British money market from an additional burden, and preserved our own financial resources to meet any emergency which may arise.

Train Killed One, Maimed Another

Victim Had Brother Killed at Same Place in Like Circumstances

ST. HYACINTHE, Aug. 3.—In the accidental death of Charles Savard, who was killed instantly by a west bound Intercolonial train three miles east of St. Madeleine station at 5.20 o'clock on Friday afternoon, a fatality which had bereaved the same family in practically identical circumstances, 4 years ago was repeated. Savard, a laborer of twenty-five, belonging to St. Hyacinthe was making his way towards Montreal with his friend, Jean Dupre, aged twenty-seven, also of this town, and a painter by trade. The two had set out for Montreal in search of work and were walking along the railway track. An east bound Grand Trunk train attracted their attention, and they stepped on to the other track to avoid the danger. An Intercolonial train was coming up in the other direction, however, and the noise of the first prevented the pedestrians from hearing the whistling of the Intercolonial. Savard was struck by the engine and instantly killed, while Dupre escaped death, but suffered severe injuries.

Four years ago Arthur Savard, a brother of the victim, met his death at almost the same place and in similar circumstances.

Dupre was found by the crew of the Intercolonial train, which came to a stop, between the two tracks, while the body of Savard was caught under the fourth car. Both the injured man and the body were brought to St. Madeleine, and after Dupre had been attended by Dr. Boivin he was taken to St. Hyacinthe, where he is under the care of Dr. Viger in the St. Charles Hospital. Though Duyre sustained a compound fracture of the right, had his right shoulder dislocated and is suffering from concussion of the brain besides slight internal injuries, Dr. Viger reports that his condition is much improved today and he is expected to recover. It is likely, however that the leg will have to be amputated as the bones are badly crushed.

Dr. Viger, who is coroner for the St. Hyacinthe district empanelled a jury yesterday and the evidence of the engineer and fireman of the Intercolonial train was heard. These men testified that they had seen the two walking on the track ahead of the train. The whistle had been blown, but the two pedestrians were apparently occupied with the Grand Trunk train and did not notice the other one coming. The emergency brake was applied immediately, but it was impossible to stop the train before the accident occurred. A verdict of accidental death was returned.

Neither Savard nor Dupre was married.

Tired Aching Feet and Limbs are promptly relieved by applying Absorbine, Jr., the antiseptic liniment. It is soothing, healing, and invigorating—puts vim and energy into jaded muscles. One of the many enthusiastic users writes: "I received the trial bottle of Absorbine, Jr., all right and at that time was unable to walk without a cane, just around the house. I used it freely and inside of two days could walk without limping, something I had not done in two months. I went to the drug store and procured a $1.00 bottle and today can walk as good as ever. I'll never be without it. I am recommending it to everyone I can, for I am a living witness.

Absorbine, Jr., should always be kept at hand for emergencies.

At druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or sent postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c. in stamps.

SURE, SAFE, LIGHT

WHEN CROWS MOBILIZE.

They Usually Mass Themselves For Attack Upon an Enemy.

The crows are masters of mobilization. Such mobilizations have frequently been investigated. Usually they prove to be for the attack on some enemy.

Thoreau speaks of the crows "bursting up above the woods where they were perching like the black fragments of a powder mill just exploded." When they are gathered for war purposes their cries will lead you to the spot where they are fighting, and these same bursts of black fragments above the trees, usually following an especial uproar of cawing, will direct you to the center of the battle.

Walter King Stone, the illustrator, and Charles Livingston Bull have told me of a mobilization they once witnessed, when the crows gathered for hours and the two observers were able to penetrate the woods to the exact spot beneath the feathered explosions. There they found a great horned owl flying low in the trees with a dead crow in his talons. Whether this was the original cause of the battle or whether he had grabbed the crow in one of the descents of the birds about his head they, of course, could not say. He was evidently struggling to find a dead tree where he could take refuge. He was saved probably by the coming of night.

Crows have even been known to attack foxes, as Winslow Homer's painting is the most famous witness.

A farmer near my home who has observed crows for many years and has the reputation of knowing more about them than any one else in the neighborhood tells me that almost invariably in his experience the cause of a large mobilization is either a big owl or a hawk. The little screech owls are also attacked, but by lesser numbers. He has also personally seen the crows attack a fox while it was crossing an open field, and once he watched a flock of nearly 100 crows worrying a Skye terrier dog, which was so thoroughly frightened that it was running in circles. I have seen crows attack a cat also, but the cat always is wise enough to make for cover.—Walter Prichard Eaton in Harper's Magazine.

Indians Have Fine Foxes.

The Indians residing near Elk Lake have now in captivity seven very fine black foxes, some of them the most perfect specimens seen around here. A year ago these would have brought a large sum of money, but at present the market is not very brisk for fur animals. A fox buyer was in Elk Lake recently and purchased a number of fine cross and red foxes, which had been captured by residents of the town.

Hair Dressing that Makes Women's Hair Grow Radiant

Women of Canada are demanding a perfect hair tonic, one that is daintily perfumed, that is not sticky or greasy, and that will make the hair grow profusely and give it a lustre that attracts admiration.

Like their clever sisters in Paris, they have learned that a woman with scant, dull, lifeless hair grows old all too soon.

Since the introduction of Parisian Sage into Canada druggists in every town are recommending Parisian Sage because they know that it will do exactly what the makers say it will do.

Besides being a hair grower and beautifier, Parisian Sage is rigidly guaranteed to stop itching scalp, to stop hair from falling, and to banish every trace of dandruff, or money back.

Parisian Sage causes the hair to grow strong, vigorous, and lustrous because it kills the dandruff germs that infest the hair roots, which is the basis of all scalp and hair diseases, and also because it furnishes natural nourishment to the weakened and run-down hair tubes.

Parisian Sage is sold by druggists everywhere for only 50 cents a large bottle. It is fully guaranteed

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

A LATE SUMMER SUGGESTION

Chintz as a Fabric For Dresses Is Meeting With Much Favor.

Now we are quite used to chintz as a fabric for home decoration, and most of us are well acquainted with the beauties of this dainty fabric. But only a clever woman would think of dressing herself in the same fabric in which she decorates her furniture and windows. And yet chintz as a dress material is altogether delightful, having cheapness as well as beauty to recommend it.

A chintz chosen for a gown is in one of the new Poiret designs, with a white background, upon which black lines in check design are drawn. A tiny red and a tiny purple flower fills the white squares. The skirt is made quite plain like a tennis model and comfortably full, so that walking in it is easy. Its only ornamentations are two huge gathered pockets, which are placed on either side of the hip, a little above the knee.

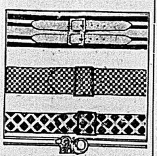
A dainty white shirt waist, ornamented with a chintz collar and cuffs, completes this effective costume.

Chintz of a very charming and new pattern can be purchased for 35 cents a yard, and three yards will be quite enough to make the entire costume. This makes the actual cost come to about a dollar. A good skirt pattern can be bought for 10 cents, and this will make things easy. From the scraps left after the skirt is cut out and made collars and cuffs for a last year's shirt waist can be devised. This will give the blouse a new air and will make it correspond with the chintz skirt. If you have a last year's straw hat that looks quite hopelessly old cover the brim with the same chintz and edge it with ball furniture fringe, which is 5 cents a yard. The result will be as smart an outfit as could be desired for a sum which will not exceed $1.50.

NEW AND NATTY BELTS.

Black and White Has Invaded the Domain of Beltdom.

The lower two belts shown in this illustration are made of white kid and are stamped in black in a checkerboard or block design. They come in various patterns and in several widths.



THREE DAINTY ACCESSORIES.

The third or top belt is a striking white kid belt, decorated with narrow stitched bands of black suede in two widths. Two stitched straps of the white kid with covered buckle ends form the fastening.

Hint For Buttonholes.

When working buttonholes on bias material or goods which ravel, first starch the material stiff and then iron dry. The material will then neither stretch nor ravel.

Housewife's Timely Tips

A Meatless Diet.

Often for dietary reasons as well as expense the meat allowance must be cut down.

Substitutes which lend variety and possess the same energy producing qualities are the following: Whole wheat flour, dried beans, peas, lentils, peanuts, walnuts, pecans, peanut butter, oatmeal, cracked wheat, whole wheat, cheese, eggs, butter, cream, olive oil, milk, macaroni and rice. These are a few of the many foods which, singly or in combination, make a wholesome diet.

Dried fruits and nuts are valuable foods as well as the fresh fruits, which are indispensable in a well balanced diet.

Whole wheat, if soaked overnight, then cooked long and slowly, makes, with thin cream or rich milk, a meal of itself. Beans, peas and lentils should be soaked, then cooked in water and softened by a pinch of soda.

Rice Croquettes With Grated Cheese.—Cook a cupful of rice in two and a half cupfuls of milk, with a teaspoonful of salt, until tender, adding more milk if needed. Season with two tablespoonfuls of butter, a dash of paprika and mix with two beaten egg yolks, then chill. When cold and stiffened mold into cones, balls or cylinder forms, dip in crumbs, then in egg white and in crumbs again. Brown in hot fat and serve with grated cheese.

Cheese Sauce.—Take three tablespoonfuls of butter, add four of flour when the butter is bubbling hot, mix well, add a half teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of paprika, one and a half cupfuls of milk and a cupful of chopped cheese. Cook the sauce well before adding the cheese and serve as soon as it is melted.

Cheese Savory.—Prepare some thin slices of toast. Cover each slice with one-half inch pieces of good flavored cheese. Lay in a baking pan and place an egg carefully in the center of each piece. Bake in a hot oven until the eggs are set. Season with salt and a dash of paprika on each.

Parsnip Croquettes.—These are especially well liked by those who are fond of parsnips. Cut the parsnips in halves and cook until tender, remove the skins and any tough portion and mash until perfectly smooth, and butter, pepper, salt and set aside to cool. When cool enough to handle mold into balls, dip in crumbs and egg, then crumbs again and fry a deep brown. Use as a garnish for a roast.

Indian Loaf Cake.

Mix a teacupful of powdered white sugar with a quart of rich milk and cut up in the milk two ounces of butter, adding a saltspoonful of salt. Put this mixture into a covered pan or skillet and set it on the fire till it is scalding hot. Then take it off and scald with it as much yellow Indian meal (previously sifted) as will make it of the consistency of thick boiled mush. Beat the whole very hard for a quarter of an hour and then set it away to cool. While it is cooling beat three eggs very light and stir them gradually into the mixture when it is about as warm as new milk. Add a teacupful of good strong yeast or one compressed yeast cake dissolved in the liquid and beat the whole another quarter of an hour, for much of the goodness of this cake depends on its being long and well beaten. Then have ready a tin mold or pan with a pipe in the center. It must be well buttered, as Indian meal is apt to stick. Put in the mixture and set in a warm place to rise for about four hours. Then bake it two hours in a moderate oven. When done turn it out with the broad surface downward and send to the table hot and whole. Cut into slices and eat with butter.

Drop Hermits.

Cream one-half cupful of butter; add one and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar and cream; now add two eggs; beat in one at a time until very light; sift three and one-half cupfuls of bread flour with two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of soda (scant) several times; alternate with one and one-half cupfuls of milk to first mixture. Flour two cupfuls of raisins (the seedless are best). Beat all together five minutes and drop on flat buttered biscuit tins and bake in hot oven until a nice brown. If butter is lightly salted put in a pinch of salt.

Russian Sauce.

Yolks of two eggs mixed with one teaspoonful of dry mustard, same amount of sugar and salt and a dash of cayenne pepper. When this is thoroughly mixed add one-half cupful of olive oil and either lemon juice or vinegar to taste. To this may be added one teaspoonful of chopped pimento and two of chili sauce. In making rub the inside of bowl with garlic or onion before making the dressing.

Eggs Virginia.

Butter a deep baking dish. Break in as many eggs as needed, allowing two for each person to be served. Season lightly with salt, cover with a thick layer of coarse breadcrumbs, dot thickly with tiny squares of bacon, sprinkle with a little finely minced parsley, add a light layer of the breadcrumbs, season very lightly with salt, dot with more bacon and bake in a moderate oven for ten minutes.

Tall Hats of the Past.

In spite of statements made to the contrary, tall hats were invented long before 1813. A Mr. Toft of Tottenham, who died in 1707, left £50 to the governors of the Tottenham free grammar school, the interest of which was to be devoted to the purchase of three tall hats as prizes for the three best boys.

The hats used to be purchased from a hatter in Bishopsgate street named Greenway for 24 shillings. But in 1811 he informed the governor that a duty of 1 shilling each had been imposed and the cost raised to 27 shillings. The duty was again raised to 2 shillings each and in 1813 to 2s. 6d. The duty was afterward repealed, but by that time the governors were purchasing Bibles instead of hats for the boys.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CHAPTER XXI.

Breaking The Peace.

Nan went to Beach House to fetch her mother home, escorted by Laddie, who was growing a most rollicking and friendly little animal, and a great consolation to his mistress, whom he loved with all his doggish heart.

They all three came back in an old fly belonging to their late host, and found Philis waiting for them on the doorstep, who made her mother the following little speech:

"Now Mammie, you are to kiss us, and tell us what good industrious girls we have been; and then you are to shut your eyes and look at nothing, and then sit down in your old arm chair, and try and make the best of everything."

"Welcome home, dearest mother," said Nan, softly kissing her. "Home is home however poor it may be; and thank God for it" finished the girl reverently.

"Oh my darlings!" exclaimed the poor mother; and then she cried a little and Dulce came up and put a rosebud in her hand; and Dorothy executed an old fashioned courtesy, and hoped that her mistress and the dear young ladies would try and make themselves as happy as possible.

'Happy, you silly old Dorothy; of course we mean to be as busy as bees, and as frolicsome as kittens!" returned Phillis, who had recovered her old sprightliness, and was ready to-day for a dozen Mrs. Cheynes and all the clergy of the diocese. "Now, mammie, you are only to peep into this room; this is our work room, and those are the curtains Mr. Drummond was kind enough to hang. "In old days," continued Phills, with mock solemnity, "the parson would have pronounced a benediction; but the modern Anglican performs another function, and with much gravity ascends the steps, and hooks up the curtains of the new-comers."

"Oh, Philis, how can you be so absurd! I am sure it was very good-natured of him. Come, mother, dear, we will not stand here listening to her nonsense." And Nan drew the mother to the parlor.

It was a very small room but still snug and comfortable, and full of pretty things. Tea was laid on the little round table that would hardly hold five, as Nan once observed, thinking of Dick; and the evening's sunshine was stealing in, but not too obtrusively. Mrs. Challoner tried not to think it dull, and endeavored to say a word of praise at the arrangements Dulce pointed out to her; but the thought of Glen Cottage, and her pretty drawing room and the veranda with its climbing roses, and the shady lawn with the seat under the acacia-trees, almost overpowered her. That they should come to this! That they should be sitting in this mean little parlor, where there was hardly room to move, loking out at the little strip of grass, and the medlar-tree, and the empty greenhouse! Nan saw her mother's lip quiver, and adroitly turned the subject to their neighbors. She had so much to say about Mr. Drummond and his sister that Mrs. Challoner grew quite interested; nevertheless, it was a surprise even to Nan when Dorothy presently opened the door, and Mr. Drummond coolly walked in with a magnificent basket of roses in his hand.

Nan gravely introduced him to her mother, and the young man accosted her; but there was a little surprise on his face He had taken it into his hetd that Mrs. Challoner would be a far older-looking and more homely person; but the stately-looking woman before him might have been an older and faded edition of Nan. Somehow, her appearance confused him; and he commenced with an apology for his intrusion:

"I ought not to have been so unceremonious. I am afraid, as you have just arrived, my visit will seem an intrusion; but my sister thought you would like some of our roses,"—he had obliged poor Mattie to say so,—"and, as we had cut some fine ones, we thought you ought to have them while they are fresh."

'Thank you; this is very kind and neighborly,' returned Mrs. Challoner; but, though her tone was perfectly civil, Nan thought her manner a little cold, and hastened to interpose with with a few glowing words of admiration.

'The roses were lovely; they were finer than those at Longmead, or even at Fitzroy Lodge, though Lady Fitzroy prided herself on her roses." Archie pricked up his ears at this latter name which escaped quite involuntarily from Nan. "And was it not good of Miss Drummond to spare them so many, and of Mr. Drummond to carry them?" all of which Nan said with a sweet graciousness that healed the young man's embarrassment in a moment.

"Yes, indeed!" echoed Mrs. Challoner, obedient as usual to her daughter's lead. "And you must thank your sister, Mr. Drummond, and tell her how fond my girls are of flowers." But though Mrs. Challoner said this, the roses were not without thorns for her. Why had not Miss Drummond brought them herself? She was pleased indeed that, under existing circumstances, any one should be civil to her girls; but was there not a little patronage intended? She was not quite sure she rejoiced in having such neighbors. Mr. Drummond was nice and gentlemanly, but he was far too young and handsome for an unmarried clergyman; at least that was her old-fashioned opinion; and when one has three very good-looking daughters, and dreads the idea of losing one, one may be pardoned for distrusting even a basket of roses.

If Mr. Drummond perceived her slight coldness, he seemed quite determined to overcome it. He took small notice of Nan, who busied herself at once arranging the flowers under his eyes; even Phillis, who looked good and demure this evening, failed to obtain a word. He talked almost exclusively to Mrs. Challoner, plying her with artful questions about their old home which he now learned was at Oldfield, and gaining scraps of information that enabled him to obtain a pretty clear insight into their present circumstances.

Mrs. Challoner, who was a soft-hearted woman, was not proof against so much sympathy. She perceived that Mr. Drumond was sorry for them, and she began to warm a little towards him. His manner was so respectful, his words so discreet; and then he behaved so nicely, taking no notice of the girls, though Nan was looking so pretty, but just talking to her in a grave responsible way, as though he were a gray-haired man of sixty.

Phillis was not quite sure she approved of it; in the old days she had never been excluded from conversation; she would have liked a word now and then. But Nan sat by quite contented; it pleased her to see her mother roused and interested.

When Mr. Drummond took his leave, she accompanied him to the door, and thanked him quite warmly.

'You have done her so much good, for this first evening is such a trial to her, poor thing!" said Nan, lifting her lovely eyes to the young man's face.

"I am so glad! I will come again," he said, rather incoherently. And as he went out of the green door he told himself that it was his clear duty to befriend this interesting family. He ought to have gone home and written to Grace, for it was long past the time when she always expected to hear from him. But the last day or two he had rather shirked this duty. It would be difficult to explain to Grace. She might be rather shocked, for she was a little prim in such things, being her mother's daughter. He thought he would ask Mattie to tell her about the Challoners, and that he was busy and would write soon; and when he had made up his mind to this, he went down to the seashore and amused himself by sitting on a breakwater and staring at the fishing-smacks,—which of course showed how very busy he was.

"I think I shall like Mr. Drummond," observed Mrs. Challoner, in a tolerent tone, when Nan had accompanied the young vicar to the door. "He seems an earnest, good sort of young man."

"Yes, mammie dear. And I am sure he has fallen in love with you," returned Phillis, naughtily, "for he talked to no one else. And you are so young-looking and pretty that of course no one could be surprised if he did." But though Mrs. Challoner said, "Oh, Phillis!" and looked dreadfully shocked in a proper matronly way, what was the use of that, when the mischievous girl burst out laughing in her face?

But the interruption had done them all good, and the evening passed less heavily than they had dared to hope. And when Mrs. Challoner complained of fatigue and retired early, escorted by Dorothy, who was dying for a chat with her mistress, the three girls went out in the garden, and walked, after their old fashion, arm in arm up and down the lawn, with Nan in the middle; though Dulce pouted and protended that the lawn was too narrow, and that Phillis was pushing her on the gravel path.

Their mothers' window was open, and they could have heard snatches of Dorothy's conversation if they had chosen to listen. Dulce stood still a minute, and wafted a little kiss towards her mother's room.

"Dear old mamsie! She had been very good this evening, has she not, Nan? She has only cried the least wee bit, when you kissed her."

'Yes, indeed. And somebody else has been good too. What do you say, Phillis? Has not Dulce been the best child possible?"

"Oh, Nan, I should be ashamed to be otherwise," returned Dulce, in such an earnest manner that it made her sisters laugh. "Do you think I could see you both so good and cheerful, making the best of things, and never complaining, even when the tears are in your eyes,—as yours are often, Nan, when you think no one is looking—and not try and copy your example? I am dreadfully proud of you both,—that is what I am," continued the warm-hearted girl. "I never knew before what was in my sisters. And now I feel as though I want the whole world to come and admire my Phillis and Nan!"

'Little flatterer!" but Nan squeezed Dulce's arm affectionately. And Phillis said, in a joking tone,—

"Ah, it was not half so bad. This evening there was mother looking so dear and pretty; and there were you girls; and though the nest is small, it feels warm and cosy. And if we could only forget Glen Cottage, and leave off missing the old faces, which I never shall—" ("Nor I", echoed Nan, with a deep sigh, fetched from somewhere)—"and root ourselves afresh, we should contrive not to be unhappy."

"I think it is our duty to cultivate cheerfulness," added Nan, seriously; and after this they fell to a discussion on ways and means. As usual, Phillis was chief spokeswoman but to Nan belonged the privilege of the casting vote.

The next few days were weary ones to Mrs. Challoner; there was still much to be done before the Friary could be pronounced in order. The girls spent most of the daylight hours unpacking boxes sorting and arranging their treasures, and, if the truth must be told, helping Dorothy to polish furniture and wash glass and china.

A Cure That Faltered.

Samuel L. Clemens used to relate on the lecture platform a comedy of courtship that might well have served to illustrate his dictum that there are three kinds of funny stories—the witty story, which is French; the comic story, which is English, and the humorous story, which is American—and that the latter is the only hard kind to tell. He recounted how a young swain was rejected simply because of his embarrassing impediment of speech, and how a friend counseled his taking the whistling cure—whenever he felt a disposition to stutter just whistle. He tried it, and with such surprising success that in a very few weeks he sought his lady to announce his complete recovery. Unfortunately the excitement of the occasion proved too much, and those who have heard Mark Twain will recall how he would stand trembling on the platform, earnestly stuttering out of one side of his mouth and conscientiously whistling out of the other, until his audience fairly groveled in mirth.—Washington Star.

Husks of the Prodigal Son.

It appears that the "husks" (siliquoe in Latin) which were fed to swine in the east and to which the prodigal son was finally reduced were nothing more nor less than the large, podlike fruit of the carob tree, whose botanical name is Ceratonia siliqua. This plant pertains to the pea family, and the husks are sometimes nearly a foot in length.

These husks contain very hard seeds resembling beans, which may be eaten with relish, although one would soon tire of them as a sole article of diet. Occasionally these husks are to be found in England and this country in confectioners' shops, where they are known as "St. John's bread."

In the east in the old days the plant was regarded with disfavor, not because it was thought to be unpalatable, but because of its association with swine. Together with the acorns of a species of oak called Quercus aegilops, it served as the principal food of pigs and hogs.—Every Week.

An Easy Way to Get Fat and be Strong

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to a remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. J. S. McKeown and other leading druggists of Belleville and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

One man was killed by an explosion in a Scottish factory.

CARE OF THE EYES

Health as Well as Beauty Demands That Eyes Get Attention.

The woman who takes care of herself should give as much attention to her eyes as she does to her skin or to her hair. In the first place after driving or being in the dust of the city or country she should wash or bathe her eyes with tepid water. This removes the irritating dust or small particles. After reading or before going to bed she should bathe the eyes with salt water or tepid water to which is added a pinch of salt, and using an eye cup, will be surprised at the difference in the sparkle of the eyes. If inflamed they should be bathed several times a day. The dull, sunken eyes, the hollow circles and the sallow complexion of many women is due, however, to the complaints and diseases peculiar to women. The best thing I know for this is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, because it is a temperance tonic, being made of roots and herbs with pure glycerine. Dr. Pierce publishes the ingredients on the wrapper so it is not a secret and I have seen many women cured by it and not only that, but the dull sunken eyes, the sunken cheek and bust, have taken on a sparkle and healthful appearance Thousands of women have testified to having been cured of womanly diseases by this Prescription. It speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear—compels the organs to properly perform their natural functions, removes pain and misery at certain times and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, dragging-down sensations, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

Keep the bowels healthy by using Dr. Pierce's Pellets. They don't gripe.

Ape the Three Monkeys.

In Japan almost every house has a statue of three monkeys. The hands of one are over his eyes, those of another are over his ears, and those of the third are over his mouth. See no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil, is the interpretation of them.

There are great men in the world, but there are few great men who talk much. When they do talk they do not utter idle words, hence little evil creeps into their speech. There are loved men in the world, generous and pitying, but they have no time to listen to gossip and evil communications. There are other men who see evil, not through morbid curiosity, but with an eye to its correction; nor do they impute evil and view with suspicion all human actions except their own.

Evil communications, seeing evil, hearing evil, speaking evil, corrupt humanity. There are many who can afford to ape the three monkeys.—Philadelphia Ledger.

ENGLISH VICTORIOUS IN THRILLING AIR FIGHT

served it would perhaps prove fatal to us, for soon the heavy guns of the enemy would be pouring salvos of high explosives into our position.

I have briefly endeavored to convey to the reader's mind the value of aircraft in the present war and how it will in future affect our destinies as a world power.

Special guns have been brought into existence to counter the aircraft. The anti-aircraft guns have proven quite effective in driving off enemy airships. The later types of anti-aircraft guns are marvels of speed and accuracy; but I leaves this for the moment.

At the commencement of the war we had few aircraft equipped with offensive weapons, only bombs. At present we have aircraft equipped with quick-firing guns, which have proved themselves a terror to the enemy's aircraft which venture within their range or engaged them in conflict in the clouds.

In the forepart of my letter I have referred to Britain's power on land and sea. I now with equal pride point to our Royal Flying Corps who have maintained the glory of old Britain in the conquest of the air, as did Wellington on land and Nelson on the sea.

You have all read of the wonderful feat of the late Lieut. Warneford, V.C., which astounded and won the admiration of the world, and also numerous articles exploiting the bravery and sacrifice of our brave birdmen. I herewith record an incident which it was my good fortune to witness. Since I have been on the firing line I have watched numerous exciting chases and bombardments of aircraft, but this to me is the most interesting I believe I have yet witnessed.

We occupied a position on the line near ———, where the Canadians again gave the Germans another taste of their steel and drove them under a withering fire from several lines of trenches. I witnessed the battle, our guns firing in a position from which a view of the trenches in front could be had with perfect ease without exposure of our position. I have good reason to remember this because a few days later a German aeroplane located us while we were firing. A premature burst exposed our position while we busily engaged bombarding a German gun position. The first indication of their having located us was when a big black smoke-box (a 4.7 H. E.) burst about five yards in front of my gun. This was followed by a salvo of shrapnel which severely wounded a bombardier of B. sub-section. This was followed by a systematic bombardment of about four hours. Meantime we scampered for cover. They put over 300 of these into us and smashed up our limbers, blew up considerable ammunition; but while they planted their shells within a few feet of our guns they did not succeed in damaging any of them. Of course we moved that night, putting dummy guns in place of the real ones. We had many a good laugh at them, wasting ammunition on our dummies. It was here I witnessed the following exciting fight in mid-air some days after.

It was a beautiful clear morning between the hours of 4.30 and 5 o'clock. The sun was just peeping over the eastern horizon. The sky was a misty blue, which with the sun's reflection made it an ideal day for aeroplane observation—that is, for the birdman; but a difficult day for the look-out man, because it is next to impossible to see an aeroplane on a day like this owing to the transparency of its planes which blend with the surrounding mist. Only at rare intervals the sun shining on some portion of his machine or the hum of his motor reveals his presence in the clouds.

While engaged in observing the beauties of the early morning sunrise and thinking how strange it seemed that the peaceful scene before me was a few hours previous an inferno of shot and shell. Poppies grew profusely in the field, their deep red hue dotting the carpet of green and gold of the surrounding shrubbery. As I looked toward the trenches in which the opposing forces waited for the word that would change the peaceful summer morning into one of turmoil and death, once again, suddenly, I am aroused from my reverie by the dull purr or hum of a motor. Instinctively my eyes search—for a few minutes in vain—the sky above me; for I know an aeroplane is skimming through the misty blue. My patience is rewarded, and quickly, with my glasses, I seek to ascertain whether it is friend or foe. My glasses soon reveal his identity; the Iron Crosses on the wings and tail and the slightly curved wings of a Taube being revealed to my eyes as he speeds along, making his reconnaissance of our lines, apparently undisturbed. I rush to our telephone and inform headquarters that a German is over us, but the vigilant eyes of our anti-aircraft gunners have become aware of his presence, and soon one hears in the stillness of the morning the sharp report of the aircraft gun. High in the air one sees a flash near the intruder. A puff of white smoke and some seconds later the detonation of an exploding shell is heard, followed by scores of them. Meantime the aeroplane gracefully turns in its course or shoots up to a higher altitude with the ease of a swallow. The white burst of shells from the aerial gun follow him leaving a trail of white clouds and puffs of smoke after him. As if in defiance to our efforts bring him down he turns again in a graceful circle and returns to reconnaissance. Again he is bombarded. While you observe with bated breath the result of each shot—some so close you are surprised and amazed, because instead of tumbling down to the earth, he sails gaily on, dodging and dipping, and cutting all kinds of dizzy figures to confuse the aim of our gunners.

Suddenly there appears, like magic from somewhere, another plane, its motor racing at full speed, dashes into the arena. Immediately I observe the Hun change his course and flee toward the German lines. I swing my glasses in the direction of the newcomer and see the familiar mark of the Allies—the rings underneath the wings. The Britisher apparently has taken the Hun by surprise and for a few minutes the race is a question of skill, the German having the advantage of speed. The latter decides or determines on the Britisher's tactics—or thinks he does. Both planes were then within range of each other. Like a flash the German makes a swoop as the British machine comes upon him, apparently to get out of the range of his machine gun, which can only shoot when on a line and from the rear of his machine. The Britisher turns his planes and mounts above the Hun, who now has resumed his flight, manoeuvering to counter the advantage now gained by the Britisher—but it's too late. A black cloud of smoke, a flash above him, and a bomb has burst, followed by another and another. Like a wounded bird he tumbles, then recovers. His engines stopped, he volplanes toward his own lines; but another 'plane, a French machine, which carries a heavier gun that a British machine, thwarts his intentions. In his endeavors to avoid the newcomer he is forced to turn his helpless machine and land on the British side. In landing the pilot, who is badly wounded, loses control of his machine, and the craft comes to earth with a crash, the framework being a tangle of wires and wreckage. He and the observer are quickly extricated. Just as I arrive on the scene, after moving through several fields to see the finish, he was hurried away by those who like myself were watching the contest.

The "finest in the world" is a well-earned distinction for our Royal Flying Corps. They are fast driving the Hun from the air as our forefathers drove the Spanish Armada from the shores of England.

Respectfully yours,
SPAFFORD.

Gunner Ray Lewis paid us a call and is in the best of health. Ray is with the 1st Battery, 1st Brigade.

Sergt. Geo. Tett, an old 34th Battery boy, recently arrived in France from Shorncliffe. He is now serving with the 9th Battery, 3rd Brigade. George paid us a call and is looking well. He called on Sergt. "Bill" Black while in England. Billy has recovered from his painful accident and is now gunnery instructor at Shorncliffe. He leaves shortly for the front.

Gunner Sword, another Belleville boy, is back with us again. He arrived from the base stationed at Shorncliffe.

Sergt. Albert Harris, late gunnery instructor at Shorncliffe, has arrived at the front, and is serving with the 3rd Brigade ammunition column. He is looking fit and well and glad to be with the boys again.

Pat and Ted Yeomans are still rendering with their usual skill valued service to the 1st Battery. I had a call from the boys and both are in the best of health. They deserve credit, both being very young, and have stood the hardships of our strenuous experiences like veterans.

Sergt.-Major Best, recently arrived at the front from the base at Shorncliffe, is doing duty with the 3rd Brigade ammunition column.

Gunner Day is still doing his bit. "Yankee" says he hopes the war will be over by duck season. Guess he means next season!

Gunner Potts, one of the G.T.R. boys, is limber gunner now. We missed him one morning. He finally turned up with three nice fat rabbits which he had shot in the woods near by. He was forgiven. Rabbit is preferable to bully beef.

Driver Carr—still smiling and in the best of health. Ernest was wounded at Ypres, but stuck to his post. He is also one of the G.T.R. boys with the Battery. He sends his regards to all.

An extract from a letter received from a Toronto lady who once resided in Belleville. She says: "I just had to write and let you know how proud we are of our Belleville boys. Now Mr. Spafford, can I send you anything? etc." We deeply appreciate the interest in our welfare, and reply, yes, dear madam, send us a home-made cake, some Old Chum smoking tobacco; but leave out the SOCKS, please! Our address: Q.M.S. Spafford, 2nd Battery, 1st Brigade, 1st Canadian Contingent, Divisional Artillery, B.E.F.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 2. — The wheat market was strong today on unsettled weather in the south delaying harvesting, and reports of probable damage in Canadian west by frost.

The advance for the day was 2 1-4 to 2 3-8c on wheat and 3 3-8c on flax.

Cash demand for No. 1, 2 and 3 Northern wheat was fair, and some off grades were also in demand, while offerings were light and unable to meet requirements. Oats in fair demand. Barley and flax quiet. Inspections on Saturday 129 cars against 147 last year. In sight today 60.

Wheat, futures, closed 2 1-4c to 2 3-8c higher, cash 1 1-2c to 2c advance, oats 3-4c higher and flax 3 3-8c up.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2.—There was nothing doing in grain for export of account today, there being no demand owing to the holidays. The local market was steady with a better demand for car lots and a moderate amount of business was done. The trade in flour continues dull and the market is without any new feature. In millfeed the feeling is very firm, owing to the increasing scarcity and the good enquiry.

Butter stronger and prices at the auction sale today scored a further advance of 1-4 to 3-8 cents per pound, finest creamery selling at 27 5-8.

Business over the cable in cheese was slow but sales of 3,000 boxes of second and third grades were made by auction here at 12 1-2 to 12 7-8 cents. The exports for the week were 3,869 boxes, as compared with 87,152 for the same week last year.

Eggs quiet and steady. Exports for the week 3,575 cases.

The market for veal calves was firm for good quality. Choice calves at $9 to $10; good calves at $8 to $8.75; medium at $6.50 to $7.50; common calves at $5.75 to $6.75; grass calves at $4 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs.

Light sheep at $5.50 to $6.25; heavy sheep at $2 to $4.50; yearlings at $6.50 to $7.50; lambs at $8.50 to $9.25; cull lambs at $7 per cwt.

Hogs.

Hogs quoted as follows: Selects, weighed off cars, $9; and $8.75 fed and watered. Heavy fat hogs, weighing over 230 lbs., 50c per cwt. is being deducted. Sows sell at $2 per cwt. and stags $4 per cwt. less than prices paid for selects.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 2—At the Montreal stock yards, west-end market, receipts of live stock for the week ending July 31 were 1,900 cattle, 2,600 sheep and lambs, 1,500 hogs and 800 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale amounted to 1,100 cattle, 2,100 sheep and lambs, 1,100 hogs and 600 calves.

Owing to the continued absence of any demand for cattle for export account in this market, and the more liberal supplies of common and medium stock coming forward, which were in excess of the requirements of the trade at this season of the year

The weak feeling which developed in the market for lambs a week ago was the feature of this trade again today and prices scored another decline of 10 to 25 cents per cwt. on account of the steady increase of the receipts. At this reduction there was a very good demand for packers and butchers and an active trade was done with sales of round lots of Ontario stock at $9.25 to $9.50, and Quebec at $8.50 to $9.00 per cwt.

There is no change in the condition of the market for sheep. Sales of ewes were made at $5.75 to $6.00 per cwt. The demand for calves is good at firm prices.

Hogs were unchanged, prices being maintained with a good steady demand from packers. Sales of choice selected lots were made at $9.50 to $9.60, and rougher lots at $9.00 to $9.40. Sows sold at $7.00 to $7.60 and stags at $4.50 to $4.80 per cwt., weighed off cars.

PREMIER BORDEN OPENS NEW MAPLE LEAF CLUB

Sir George and Lady Perley and Rudyard Kipling Witness the Ceremony

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Premier Borden opened today the new Maple Leaf Club organized for Canadian soldiers on furlough or those wounded and leaving for convalescent homes. Most of the funds are supplied by Canadians. There is accommodation for seventy. The ceremony was attended by Sir George and Lady Perley, Rudyard Kipling, R. Lindsay, Perceval Ridout and Mrs. Ronald Greville who has lent the club house and provided the furniture.

Premier Borden remarked that he could realize the service such a club would afford, as he had the experience of the good effects of a similar club established in Ottawa four months back. He could only repeat that while the men had stern work in the field and had done it valiantly, grateful thanks were due to the women of the Empire.

Rudyard Kipling said the club, like everything else in war, was created to fill a gap. Briefly, the position was that the club would fill a gap between the time when a man left the hospital and the time when he went into the convalescent home, when he could not spend that time with friends.

ASKED TO REMAIN IN OFFICE

TOKIO, Aug. 3.—The Elder Statesmen have recommended to Emperor Yoshihito that the cabinet headed by Count Okuma as Premier be requested to remain in office unconditionally. This decision was communicated by Prince Oyama and Field Marshal Yamagata to Count Okuma, who said he would take up with his colleagues the question of withdrawing their resigna-

FALLING A MILE.

Curious Effect of Dropping Rocks Down a Deep Mine Shaft.

In reference to the deep mine shafts at Calumet some experiments conducted by members of the faculty of the Michigan College of Mines are interesting. It had been noticed that in the vertical shafts at the Tamarack mine if some ore or rock were spilled near the surface men working in the bottom of the shaft a mile below were not much bothered and sometimes only observed "a little dust." It is stated that a car of broken rock could be dumped into the shaft without injury to a man standing directly underneath a mile down.

The reason is that the rock would never reach the bottom, but would lodge in the sides of the shaft on the timbers that protrude a few inches at intervals—that is, the rock would not fall straight, since these shafts are exactly vertical.

In the experiments conducted two round metal balls were dropped into the center of a shaft by burning threads by which they were suspended, so as to give them no lateral motion. It was tried to catch the balls in a box of clay in the bottom of the shaft. None of them was caught. One ball was never found afterward. The other was found in the east wall of the shaft only a few hundred feet below the surface.

The explanation is that the earth is revolving from west to east, which gave the ball an eastward component in its fall because a particle on the surface of the earth is traveling at a higher rate of speed than one nearer the center, although at the same angular velocity. Thus a ball or rock dropped in the shaft will strike the east wall a few hundred feet from the surface, possibly then rebounding several times in its drop until it lodges on a timber or on a level.—Engineering Magazine.

THE FREEZING OF LIGHT.

Radium Rays Congeal at a Temperature of Minus 312 Degrees.

The world stood with gaping mouth and baited breath when science announced the phenomenon of frozen air, but wonderment has probably reached its limit when one learns that such an intangible and weightless thing as light has been frozen.

It is customary to speak of the enormous generative power of heat, but more astounding still is the fact that by means of cold a force may be imprisoned and retained which when liberated traverses space at a velocity of 186,000 miles per second.

Like all great discoveries, the process is exceedingly simple and based upon formulas that one marvels at not having been employed long ago. Radium emits light which is called "emanation," and this "emanation" is nothing more or less than a gas. It is possible to freeze all gases, and when "emanation" is subjected to a temperature of 312 degrees below zero it becomes congealed.

The strangest feature of the phenomenon, however, is to be observed when the "emanation" commences to thaw, when from the surface of the surrounding liquid air brilliant spangles of light stream upward, producing a most beautiful and dazzling effect.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Trolley Tragedy Manager Arrested

E. R. Dickson, Head of Trolley Co. Held on Big Bail

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Aug. 4—Mr. E. R. Dickson, Vice-President and General Manager of the International Car Company, on the Ontario service of which the fatality of July 7 occurred at Queenstown, resulting in the death of nearly a score of Toronto picnickers, was arrested on a charge of criminal negligence by High Constable Boyle to-day, before the opening of this morning's session of the resumed inquest. He was arraigned before Magistrate James M. Campbell of St. Catharines, and held in $20,000 bail bonds to appear on September 1 at St. Catharines.

The possibility of action against the car crew is very uncertain, according to Mr. Michael Brennan, the Crown Attorney for Lincoln county. Motorman Boyt is seriously ill at his home from injuries sustained in the accident.

Jury Renders Verdict.

After considering the mass of evidence taken during the previous sittings, the jury, over which Coroner Greenwood of St. Catharines presided, retired shortly after 3 o'clock and returned four hours later. They said:

"We find that Harold J. Partridge and others came to their death on July 7 from excessive speed, causing car 685 of the International Car Company to derail and overturn. Said car was driven by Motorman Sidney Boyt, and in charge of Conductor George Caswell. Excessive speed was caused by the ineffective working on the brakes on a wet and greasy rail. We find also that the motorman did all in his power that was possible for him to do with the equipment at hand to control the car. We still further find a very slack observance of rules of the company by the officers and operators regarding equipment, which includes sand and loading."

Charles M. Lowry of St. David's was the foreman of the jury, which was composed of men from this village and Queenstown.

A. E. Gooderham, and passed unanimously by the meeting. This means was decided upon of signalizing the war anniversary.

The number of families receiving assistance in July was 2,979.

THE FRENCH RESIST VIOLENT ATTACKS

Spirited Engagement With Bombs, Grenades and Artillery Last Night—Trench Warfare Along Whole Western Front—Little Progress Possible

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 5.—So little apparent progress is being made in the French and Belgian war zones, says a statement made by an unquestionable authority, because the opposing forces are engaged in trench warfare along the whole front from the North Sea to Switzerland, where manoeuvres are impossible, because every square mile of front is swept by artillery fire. Ground can be gained only by frontal attacks which cannot be multiplied and prolonged indefinitely, not only because of the moral and physical strain but owing to the destructive losses involved.

Nevertheless the French army has from time to time renewed this offensive with substantial results in ground gained, improvement in its own morale, occupation of the enemy's forces, preventing the removal of any considerable portion of troops to the east, and above all, heavy losses to the enemy in fighting strength.

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 5—(Afternoon official statement) In the Artois district, around Souchez, there took place last night fairly spirited engagements with grenades and bombs, as well as with artillery. There were also fairly active artillery exchanges at Tracy-Leval and in the vicinity of Vailley in the valley of the Aisne.

In the Argonne district the night passed with much activity. There was rifle firing and throwing of bombs from trench to trench, together with artillery firing on several different occasions.

On the heights of the Meuse at Boise Haut a German attack was easily checked.

In the Vosges last night there was a continued and very severe bombardment of our trenches at Lingekopf yesterday evening. German forces delivered a very violent attack against the French position at this point, but in spite of this, with the exception of some trenches on the crest of Lingskopf, we retained all our ground.

900 TURKISH SHIPS SUNK IN BLACK SEA

LONDON, Aug. 5—The Morning Post has the following from Petrograd: Russian destroyers in the Black Sea continue their devastating work upon the Turkish flotilla carrying supplies for Constantinople. Altogether nearly 900 enemy vessels have been burnt or sunk since the beginning of the war, among the number being several large steamers and a dozen sailing ships of a thousand tons each.

Most of the vessels were, of course, small coasting craft, which counted on their insignificance to escape the vigilance of the Russian scout boats. Some were sunk at sea, but the majority were burnt at anchor or within easy reach of the shore.

Care has been taken also to destroy all boat-building yards along the coast, so that this small vessel trade, upon which Constantinople is largely dependent for necessaries, may now safely be regarded as having been extinguished.

OVER 6,000 TEUTONS IN NORTHERN CAMPS

OTTAWA, Aug. 4.—Over six thousand Germans and Austrians are now interned at various camps throughout Canada. There are over a thousand prisoners at each of the two northern camps at Spirit Lake, Quebec and Kapuskasing, Ont., and the men have some five hundred acres cleared. This will be put under crop next year. Many of the Austrians are taking up the land and are starting to work their own farms, although under surveillance.

46 BRITISH STEAMERS SUNK DURING JULY

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The monthly statement of the Board of Trade, issued today, shows that during July 46 British steamships, with an aggregate tonnage of 48,712, were sunk by German warships, with a loss of 63 lives; four steamers, whose tonnage totalled 4,705, were sunk by mines, with 19 deaths. German warships also sank 16 sailing vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 5,747.

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The British steamship Costello, of 591 tons, has been sunk. The crew were saved, with the exception of one man, who was drowned.

WOMEN SEEK CLEMENCY FOR STH. AFRICAN REBELS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 5.—A Reuter despatch from Pretoria says movements seeking clemency for rebel prisoners culminated today in a meeting of five thousand women including three thousand delegates from outside points who petitioned the Governor General for the release of General De Wett, who is serving six years for treason and of other rebels awaiting trial. Governor General told them he could only lay their request before his ministers.

Piet Gobler, member of the South African Parliament and grandson of the late Paul Kruener, has been sentenced to two years imprisonment and fined twenty-five hundred dollars for high treason.

Scarboro Farmer Hero of Wreck

Freighter Alexandria Still Lying on Sand Bank in Lake Ontario

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—When Captain William Bloomfield, the last of the crew of the ill-fated steamer Alexandria to leave her wreckage, was finally landed on the rocks below Scarboro' Cliffs at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, he seized the hand of Ed. Middleton, the Scarboro' township farmer, who, by swimming out through surf and breakers with a life-line, had been the means of bringing six or seven sailors safely to short. Both men were dripping wet. "You are a hero," said the Captain briefly. "I was a sailor once myself," replied Middleton.

"If ever a man deserved a medal, it is Middleton," said one of the rescued men. "How he swam in that water bumping against wreckage is more than I can tell, but he did it, and here we are." Middleton was also a hero in his modesty. "I had a swim. I just took a line and swam out." That is his brief story of the rescue.

Toronto, Aug. 4.—The Alexandria has been wrecked, but freight still calls for passage from Montreal to Toronto, so the majority of the rescued crew, having been provided with new clothes, were despatched from Toronto to Montreal yesterday to man the steamer Belleville, which will make the passage from Montreal to Toronto once a week, as did the Alexandria. Underwriters arrived in the city last night to make an examination of the Alexandria, which lies so badly smashed off Scarboro' Bluffs that it may be impossible to tow her off. However, an effort to do so is probable. The underwriters will go by tug to the scene of the wreck this morning.

The owners, the Canada Steamship Lines, could not place any value on her cargo yesterday, as they had not received all the bills of lading. One of their number, Mr. Weisback, of Buffalo, stated last night he thought the Alexandria was insured for $60,000.

The task of keeping the steamer on her course in Tuesday's gale would have been a heavy one with a normal cargo of 1,000 tons aboard. It was an impossible one with the 300 tons of general merchandise, which was all she carried on the trip which ended in her wreck off Scarboro' Bluffs. The cargo included a consignment of sugar and vinegar. There were about 2,000 bags for the Canada Sugar Company. It also included canned goods and some furniture. The wreckage of it all is being washed up on shore.

COULDN'T LAUNCH BOAT.

"It was about 10 o'clock," said Capt. Chapman of the life-saving crew, who did gallant work, "that the message came to us that we were needed. It was too rough, and it would have been foolish for us to try and get there with our motor boat. We couldn't have lived in the storm.

"It was an awful place to get down at the cliffs. It took us longer to get down there than it did to make the trip out from the city, but after we did get down we used the lifeboat belonging to the steamer. On the first start we failed. The boat got full of water and we had to come back. On the second attempt we made it all right, and we got the captain and three of the crew off safely."

BAD TIME NOW FOR NEWSPAPERS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Berlin Vorwaetre says that two hundred German newspapers and periodicals ceased publication August 1st, and since the war began the number of German publications have been reduced to fewer than twelve hundred.

Owng to the decreased revenue and shortage of chemicals used in the manufacture of white paper, London dailies which hitherto have been printing twenty or more pages have reduced to ten or twelve pages by agreement.

WARSAW IS TAKEN BY THE GERMANS

According to Berlin Message Troops Broke Through Outer and Inner Lines of Defences and Took 22 Russian Officers and 4,840 Men

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Aug. 5.—Warsaw was taken this morning by German troops, according to a special announcement at German army headquarters.

Yesterday and last night Bavarian troops under command of Prince Leopold broke through the forts and outer and inner lines of the city's defences, where the rearguard of the Russian troops made a stout resistance..

The headquarters' report further says German armies under Generals Von Schols and Von Gallwitz advanced toward Lomza, Ostrov and Vyszkoit roads, and in a succession of violent engagements they took 22 Russian officers and 4,180 men, with seventeen machine guns.

Yesterday and Tuesday German cavalry defeated various detachments of Russian cavalry in Courland, taking 2,200 prisoners.

The situation to the north of Ivangorod remains unchanged. German cavalry have entered Wladimir and Wolynsk, on the Bug Rivre.

LONDON OPINION

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Consensus of opinion among newspapers to-day is that the situation around both Warsaw and Riga has become more menacing and that it will be impossible to save Warsaw. Latest news suggests, according to some papers, that German entry in Polish capital will not be much longer delayed.

Took Their Part In Hot Actions

Wounded Guests of Khaki League Had Been at Langemarck and Hill 60

Men who had been through some of the hardest fighting of the war, and had their share of the knocks received at Langemarck and St. Julien, or on Hill 60, "at the places where the Canadians did not disgrace themselves," as Sergeant James Craddock modestly put it, were among the few wounded who passed through Montreal last night, resting between trains at the Khaki League, where they enjoyed their smokes after the good cheer provided for them.

Sergeant Craddock of the 3rd Battalion, Toronto, had taken part in the heavy fighting at Langemarck on April 22, 23 and 24, when his battalion, flanking the 5th Royal Highlanders on the right, beat the opposing lines back and did their share in saving the situation, then serious. While Sergeant Craddock had so far come through scathless, this action left him crippled in one arm. "Out in the open," he said "any one Tommy, British or Canadian, was worth five of the enemy, and the Germans were no good with the bayonet, but their artillery was firing at times thirty shells to every one of ours. When they got their machine guns going, the ground in the rear looked as if hail was falling hard. Nothing could come through that fire alive, if any living being got into it."

Talking of the German snipers who often got behind the French or British lines, Sergeant Craddock said these must get some special inducement to do the work. "They were good shots," he added, "and brave men too, for they took a big risk and got little quarter when they were caught. One of their games was to try and cut the telephone wires connecting our trenches with the base."

U. S. VESSEL SEIZED BY BRITISH SHIP

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 4.—A cablegram received here to-day announces the seizure of the American schooner Laura C. Anderson by a British cruiser which took her into Gibraltar. The schooner cleared from Newport News, Va., June 29, for Melita, Morocco, with a cargo of bituminous coal.

The message, which was received by A. D. Cummins & Company, agents for the schooner, contained no further information.

It requested that the consignee's name be cabled to the British Admiralty. From this request the agents here assumed that the cargo was shipped "to order."

KINGSTON CRIME OF MADDENED MAN IS INEXPLICABLE

KINGSTON, Ont., Aug. 4.—So far no motive is known as to why Albert Suddard visited the home of Mrs. Nancy Job and killed her in his maddened frenzy when she defended herself. He did not know her, had never been seen around the place, and the only supposition is that in his stupefied state he had gone to the wrong house. He is now in the county jail and insists he knew nothing of the horrid affair. It is possible that insanity will be a plea at the trial in the fall.

MUNITIONS CAMPAIGN SPREADS TO IRELAND

DUBLIN, Aug. 4.—The Ministry of Munitions announces that it has decided to undertake the making of munitions on a large scale in Ireland. Orders will be placed with the country representatives of the Ministry who reside here with the object of organizing Ireland as a munitions producing area.

Steps have been taken to conserve Ireland's supply of skilled labor and to furnish machinery for three central works or arsenals to be established here.

Casualties Among Canadian Troops

2ND. BATTALION

According to German list, prisoner; place not stated—Ernest Chamberlain (formerly 9th), L'Epiphanie, Que.

Previously reported missing and now prisoner—William Owens Tindale, Shelbourne, Ont.

Bugler James Lardie

James Lardie, who was wounded at Hill Sixty, France, is in the city this week, renewing old friendships.

At the beginning of the war Lardie enlisted with the Grenadier Guards, of Montreal, 14th Battalion. Formerly he sailed on the Great Lakes for 18 years.

At Hill 60, he got a dose of gas, and a bayonet through the thigh, causing him to be unfitted for duty. When asked what he did to the German who wounded him, he replied: "Well, I don't think he will harm anyone else. I guess he's out there yet, if a Jack Johnson hasn't buried him."

Lardie landed in Canada on July 8th, and was honorably discharged in Quebec July 20th.

Questioned on the general conduct of affairs, Lardie stated that he could not speak generally, but as for him, "had plenty of grub and no kick coming." It's a large body of men to feed regularly and it is well done. He could tell various stories of the battle field but with becoming reticence, speaks very little on this subject.

He lived in this city some six years previous to enlisting, and left a little motherless girl of six when he went away; but he is back, now, only slightly maimed, and has done his bit.

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—Casualties in Second Battalion: Prisoner of war—Pte. Kelly, Brockville.

STRINGENT LIQUOR LAW FOR KINGSTON

License Board Tries Restriction, But Is Ready for More Drastic Action

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—If the closing of bars in Kingston at 7 o'clock in the evening does not have the desired effect in the matter of soldiers drinking, the Ontario License Board is prepared to take more drastic action. Chairman Flavelle made this announcement yesterday. The order of the board, which was ratified by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, goes into effect next week.

The cutting off of the sale of drink in Kingston bars after 7 o'clock in the evening goes much farther than the military regulations. According to the latter the soldiers can get beverages in the hotels from 6 o'clock to 10 in the evening. Under the new license regulation soldiers will be able to get liquor in Kingston bars only on hour in the day. No persons, either soldiers or civilians, will get liquor after 7 o'clock.

The new regulation comes as a result of the visit of Vice-Chairman Dingman to the city. "We were forced to do something," said Chairman Flavelle yesterday, "and if the closing at 7 o'clock does not accomplish the objects of the Commission there will be nothing left for us but to take more drastic action."

Some time ago the board refused to extend licenses in the suburbs of Kingston but the soldiers at Barriefield Camp went across the bay to Kingston in the evening. By closing the bars at 7 the board is meeting the views of the military authorities. License-holders in Kingston have been notified that any infringement will man cancellation or suspension of license.

Canada Resolved To Fight to End

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Thousands were unable to gain admission to the opera house to-night when Hon. Arthur Balfour and Premier Borden were the principal speakers at an imperial patriotic meeting. The Marquis of Crewe presided and Madame Clara Butet led the wonderful assemblage in the National Anthem.

"We can say with confidence," declared Mr. Balfour, "that with all our enemies' painstaking ability there are many miscalculations they have made except in recognizing the value of ammunition and of great guns, and the enemy which has miscalculated for a year may perhaps miscalculate till the end of the war."

"We are determined to see this war through to a good end, and that determination is shared in every part of the British Empire."

OVATION TO BORDEN

The vast assemblage rose, cheering and waving handkerchiefs, when Premier Borden was called on.

The prime minister said, considering all the events of the year, there were some matters on which they could congratulate themselves to the full. The unity of the empire was never more fully demonstrated than at the present time.

Alluding to what Mr. Balfour had said of the navy, the Canadian premier said: "We in the overseas dominions as much as you realize that the pathways of the ocean are the veins and arteries of the empire."

"We are as fully conscious as you what that ceaseless vigil in the North Sea means, and of the fact that the sea has been rid of those marauders by which our commerce at first was troubled, and that the navy enabled us to keep that close contact which is so necessary in war. This is a war of material resources in an extraordinary degree, and for that reason as well as for others, I have every confidence in the outcome. It simply depends on our self-denial and organizing capacity, and we shall fail in neither.

LOOKING TO FUTURE.

"Those not invested with responsibility of office can scarcely imagine how the rush of events came upon us in the early months. This not a time to speak of the past, but to look to the future, to see there shall be no failure. I believe there will be no failure. The first twelve months of war may not have been all we anticipated, but if there is disappointment with us, the disappointment of Germany is ten-fold greater.

"In visiting hospitals I have found one spirit of consecration to the cause we all have in hand. An empire like ours is worth living for and dying for, and it is greater now than a year ago."

"Once for all it has been borne in upon the hearts and souls of all of us that great policies which touch and control the issues of peace and war concern more than the people of these islands. God grant we shall bear ourselves in this war, and be so guided in all the momentous results to which it must lead, that whether in these islands or in the overseas nations, the citizenship of this empire shall be a still greater and nobler possession in years to come than it has ever been in all our glorious past.

CANADA'S MESSAGE.

"I have spoken to you frankly on some matters of great moment. If I had not done so I would have been unworthy of the trust reposed in me. Before I close let me bring to you from the people of Canada this latest message: For those who have fallen we shall not cease to mourn for the cause to which they consecrated their lives; we shall not cease to strive until it triumphs; we are supremely confident it will assuredly triumph, and for that great purpose we are inspired by unflinching determination to do our part."

Letters From Belleville Boys At The Front

CORP. HERBERT B. WELLER

The following letter has been received from Corp. Herbert B. Weller, of the 21st Battalion:—

West Sandling Camp,
July 18, 1915.

Dear Mrs. B—Your most welcome letter of June 25th received. I had indeed often thought of writing you, it does seem hard to keep up your correspondence here; so much to pass your spare time, quite different from Kingston. The 39th have been here over a week. I have seen all the boys and they all spoke of the royal send-off Belleville gave them. It must have been an eventful time. Everything in the military is a whirl in this country. We have been having very interesting drill since we arrived. We are now drilling as a brigade, 4 battalions, the 18th of London, 19th and 20th of Toronto and the 21st, and known as the 4th Infantry Brigade. Lord Brooks is our Brigadier. Major-Gen. Sam. Hughes, Premier and Lady Borden inspected and reviewed our whole 2nd division yesterday, 4 brigades being 22,100 men, mounted and infantry. It was a grand sight. We were considered to be in excellent review order.

We are threatened with continus raids by Zeppelins on our camps. They fail to get here though. Ernest Geen and I have had our leave which we spent in London. To go into details of any how it appeared to us, is too much for me. It is all I ever expected. Of course it is not considered up to normal, either, in these times. The theatres are good, but only considered fair. We have very little sickness in camp and the boys are all well, and anxious to get to the front. We would not be surprised if we are moved out any time now. We understand the Queen and King and Lord Kitchener are to inspect us this Tuesday. I wish you would remember me to Mrs. O'Flynn with my best regards to yourself and Mr. B.—

Most Sincerely,
CORP. HERBERT B. WELLER

FROM CAPTAIN O'FLYNN

Letters have been received this week from Captain O'Flynn dated 20th of July. He says that the Belleville boys with him are all well, and that some of the boys had leave on the day he was writing, among others Sergeant Hutchison, of this city. He says they have been on trench duty with regular relief steadily and that they have not been out of the range of the heavy guns of the Germans for five months. He also says that Milton Vandervoort had returned to his duty, that Charlie Gibson had also recovered, and that while the work has not been as arduous as it was at Ypres, the enemy keep them wide awake by regularly shelling them and by the use of rifle grenades. He said that they have been fortunate in reference to gas as they had not been bothered with gas since Ypres, so that the Belleville boys had escaped that danger.

The Captain sent some photographs of his friends, among others Capt. Birdsall, of Birdsall, Ont., Lieut. A. Brown, of Winnipeg, Manitoba; Capt. R. D. Ponton, of Belleville; Capt. Geo. T. Richardson, of Kingston, and also Capt. L. F. Guttman, of Queen's University. The photographs are good and must have been taken before Capt. Ponton became ill. Capt. Ponton looks thin, and evidently the strenuous tasks were wearing on him at that time. The Captain sent his best wishes to his friends.

A cable was also received on Saturday last congratulating his sister, Mrs. Doyle, on the anniversary of her birthday and containing the information that the Belleville boys were all well.

MARRIAGE

CAREY-HAMBLY—At the residence of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. T. H. Hambly, 46 Alexander St. their younger daughter, Ida Elizabeth Helen and Mr. Conrade George Carey of Moose Jaw, Sask., son of Oswald F. Carey of Goderich, Ont., were quietly married by the Rev. R. C. Blagrave of Christ Church on Wednesday, August 4th.

DEATHS.

PAYNE—In Belleville on August 5th, 1915, Charles Frederic Payne, aged 65 years.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, 158 Burnham street, on Friday at 3 o'clock, to St. Thomas Church. Interment, Belleville cemetery.

DOG DIES TO SAVE GIRL

CALDWELL, N.J., Aug. 4.—Don, a collie dog, owned by John Miller, gave up his life to save the 6-year-old daughter of his master from a copperhead snake. The dog killed the snake, but died two hours later from poison.

Agnes Miller and her older sister, Clara, started out for a romp with Don this afternoon and were making for a wood not far from their home, with the dog at their heels.

The dog suddenly sprang forward, growled, and leaped upon a copperhead directly in the path of the little girl. Both girls ran home and told their father. Miller hurried to the scene and got the dog, but although a veterinary surgeon was summoned Don died.

Army of Belgium Strong as Ever

King Albert of Belgium Says Prolongation of War Permits Filling up Ranks

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The Daily News has the following from Milan: Through the medium of The Secolo, which has, above all other Italian papers, supported the cause of Belgium, King Albert expresses his thanks for the sympathy which has been shown to the Belgians by the Italians. After having spoken of the events of the first year of war, and the present position on the Belgian-German front, the King remarks that the prolongation of the war has allowed them to reform their cadres and complete their effectives by means of an appeal which the Government has made to the young Belgians dispersed throughout Britain, Holland and France. The result was after a year of war the Belgian army has now found itself again as strong as it was at the moment of the German invasion last August. This position was proof of the brilliant virtues of endurance and patriotism of the Belgian people.

LAID TO REST

ARTHUR H. CARLISLE

Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Mr. Arthur H. Carlisle took place from his brother's residence on Charlotte street, and was largely attended. Rev. Mr. Boyce, of Napanee, assited by the Rev. R. N. Adams of this city, conducted services. Interment took place at Belleville cemetery. The bearers were Messrs. G. S. Sharpe, S. Stocker, A. Morrice, C. Bonisteel, A. White and J. Chisholm.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Fort Henry and precincts have been placed out of bounds to all soldiers.

Lieut. Rogers of the 8th C. M. R., brought six recruits to the regiment from Belleville yesterday.

Sergeant McQuarrie of the 8th C. M. R., brought to camp ten recruits for his regiment, which he secured in the Quyon district, on the north shore of the Ottawa river. The men secured in this district are of a strong and sturdy type and make good men for a mounted corps.

In an assault-at-arms the boxing bouts were won by Rallie of the 59th Battalion, and Hallet of the 8th C. M. R. Private Petrie of the 59th Battalion, won the wrestling contest. After the programme on the field the men gathered in the Y.M.C.A. tent and spent the balance of the evening in singing popular songs.

Lieut. Ben-O-Liel, who has been attached to the 59th Battalion, has received an appointment as chaplain and will leave for overseas to-morrow. He is an Anglican clergyman and gave up his church to come to Barriefield camp. He has been doing duty of a regular officer since coming to camp. He will be attached to some overseas unit already on the other side of the ocean in the capacity of chaplain.

Unknown Woman By Railway Tracks

Police Probing Mystery of Unconscious Victim, Who Will Probably Die

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—Considerable mystery surrounds the circumstances whereby an unidentified woman last night received injuries to her head that made her unconscious in the vicinity of the G.T.R. tracks north of Queen street on the Don River. At an early hour this morning the patient was still unconscious at St. Michael's Hospital. It is feared she has a fractured skull.

A G.T.R. engineer while driving up the tracks about 10 o'clock last night saw the body lying beside the tracks and informed the gateman at Logan avenue. He went down the tracks and found the woman about one hundred yards north of Queen street. No train crew reported last night that they had struck any person.

Excepting for a small tear in her raincoat the woman's clothes were undamaged, which seems to indicate that she was not struck by a train. The injury was on the back of her head, and, according to the authorities at the hospital, was made with a blunt instrument. If she received her injuries by a human hand it appears that robbery was not the motive. In a small hand satchel which was found beside her there was 95 cents in silver and some civic car tickets. She was not wearing jewellery.

The injured woman is about 54 years of age, 5 feet 5inches in height, and was respectably dressed. She was wearing a black hat trimmed with white, and was carrying, beside the satchel, an umbrella with a rounded handle. The umbrella was slightly bent.

Fifteen Thousand Machine Guns

Fifteen thousand machine-guns had been donated to the Canadian forces by private subscription up to yesterday.

A week ago the number was 1,000 guns, at a cost of $1,000,000, or $1,000 per gun. In the interval contributions have poured in with the result that the sum of $1,500,000 has now been promised, 500 more guns being thus added to the 1,000 already received.

Figuring on the basis of two Canadian contingents in the field, this would mean an equipment of about 40 quick-firers per battalion. The original provision was four guns, and this was doubled by the Militia Department. When the guns supplied by private subscription are added, the Canadian forces will be even better supplied with these modern portable death machines than the German troops who are supposed to have about 16 guns per battalion.

Actual orders on the books of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company now total between $65,000,000 and $70,000,000, and the company also has options on sufficient additional orders to bring the amount up to over $100,000,000. It is understood that these options may be exercised any time during the remainder of the current calendar year.

A meeting of those interested in the Canadian Club campaign to secure preserved fruits for the soldiers in the hospitals was held at Hamilton. Satisfactory reports were given.

Lonely Robber Got $21,300

Then He Locked up Paying Teller in the Bank Vault

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Aug. 4.—The Cedar Rapids National Bank was held up and robbed of $21,300 early today by a lone robber, who at the point of a revolver compelled Leo Perrin the paying teller to open the vaults and afterwards locked him up. Perrin was discovered a prisoner in the vault about fifteen minutes later, in a state of temporary insanity, as the resut of his experience.

The robber is believed to have been in the building all night. He made his escape and no trace of him has been found of him up till noon.

SIR RODMOND ROBLIN

WINNIPEG, August 4.—Mrs. Nellie McClung last night opened here a series of four addresses, speaking in Manitou constituency, where Mr. W. H. Sharpe is running.

Sir James Aikens, opposition leader, holds a big meeting in Winnipeg to-night, addressed by himself and the local candidates, and Thursday night the Liberals wind up the campaign with a second rally here.

The Free Press this morning says Sir Rodmond Roblin is on his father's farm, seven miles east of Picton, Ont., and recently overworked himself in haying operations.

Post says a gigantic strike, involving thousands of machinists throughout New England, will be considered Sunday at Hartford when officers of International Machinists' Union meet to hear reports on Foss strike at Hyde Park and other wage disputes in Boston, Worcester, Taunton, Springfield and other centres.

Leads in Fashions Despite the War

Latest Winter Creations as Exhibited by Jenny and Doeuillet of Paris

PARIS, Aug. 4.—The small effect that the war has had on Paris as a fashion centre was demonstrated today when Jenny was one of the first houses to exhibit winter models. These are actually superior to those of the previous year. Before a crowd naturally smaller than usual, but comprising all the most important buyers, some 140 models were shown.

The principal feature is the absence of military models, with the exception of some Muscovite effects in fur-trimmed velvet. For afternoon gowns, which were one of the features of the show, the favorite material is velvet. Dark shades are preferred, including many blue and black. Skirts are wide.

In tailored suits there is little new. The jackets are all below the waist line, with full godets.

Evening dresses are made in metal brocade silk, generally of yellow shades, maize and narcisse. They are trimmed with silver or gold lace.

Another good feature is theatre and restaurant gowns and evening wraps in velvet, trimmed with fur. The colors are mostly cerise and violet.

Among Jenny's new effects is a new wide high collar for afternoon gowns, made oval and touching the front and back away from the side. Another novelty is a round evoluntionary collar single or double, in pelerine effects, also in postillion and girondin style. Another is a new sleeve for afternoon and theatre, slightly puffed and full.

For similar wear she makes skirts with alternate rows of mousseline de soie and velvet, each band of velvet growing wider towards the bottom of the skirt from the waist, the muslin remaining unchanged. A striking novelty is a jersey blouse to wear with tailor-mades.

Doeuillet also opened today, showing a very Parisienne collection, principally of velvet corduroy and velvet saille for tailor-made suits and walking dresses. The colors, like Jenny's are sombre. Quiet-colored blue and green plaids are also used. The feature of this collection is a wonderful show of evening gowns for young women in lancret blue and rose.

AN AUTO PILGRIMAGE

One Hundred Suffragettes to Motor From San Francisco to Washington

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—An automobile pilgrimage across the country by 100 women will start from San Francisco next month for Washington to take to Congress a petition signed by thousands asking that the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment be adopted this year.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is the national chairman for the work and Mrs. P. Hearst local chairman in San Francisco. Mrs. Hearst has given $1,000 for the convention fund. The union has two headquarters in San Francisco and four organizers. At the headquarters at the Exposition grounds a reception is held daily in the interests of the convention and three meetings week.

The one hundred women will be led by Miss Charlotte Whitney, chairman of the Women's Congressional Union for California. The party will be three months on the way, reaching Washington in December. They will have meetings as they go and will carry the big petition. Reaching Washington the women will settle down to watch the progress of the suffrage movement and see what the men of their parties are doing.

Calls have been sent to 25,000 influential women of the suffrage states to attend the convention. Miss Annie Martin has sixty of the most influential women of her state to go as delegates and other states will be equally as well represented. The details of action to be taken will be considered by about five hundred women, averaging 50 accredited delegates from each of the suffrage states.

Miss Paul is making a rapid tour of the country, telling the work of the convention, making suggestions to the members of the union and others interested, in regard to methods of raising money to pay expenses of the convention.

REPORTED DEAD, WAS FULL OF SPLINTERS

Sergt. Heaton, of Kingston Battery Underwent Three Operations; Lives

KINGSTON, Aug. 4.—Sergeant Heaton of the Fifth Field Battery, who was reported to have been killed at the front, is very much alive. A letter has been received from Corporal Douglas Williams, of the 21st Battalion, now at Shorncliffe, in which he states that he was talking to Heaton a short time ago and that he had left the hospital where he underwent three operations. Fourteen pieces of shell were taken out of his body. He is doing nicely.

A simple enlarging machine may be made of an oak board seven-eighths of an inch thick, and a little wider than the camera with which it is to be used. A box is built on one end of the board, with an opening the size of the camera in that side of the box which faces the other end of the board. A thirty-two candle power bulb backed with a reflector is mounted in the box behind the opening. A slot is made in the baseboard, running from the box to the other end, and a moving upright, with a block and set screw running in the slot, is provided to hold the printing paper on which the enlargement is to be made. In order to make an enlargement of a negative the plate (or film inclosed between two pieces of glass) is mounted in the usual place in the camera, the lens is opened and the light turned on.—Technical World.

Telling the Age of a Fish.

The age of a fish can be determined with accuracy by inspection of the otoliths, or bony concretions, which are found in the auditory apparatus. These otoliths increase in size during the entire life of the fish, each year adding two layers, a light colored layer formed in summer and a dark layer formed in autumn and winter. The alternate layers are sharply contrasted and very distinct, so that there is no difficulty in counting them. The number of pairs of layers is equal to the number of years the fish has lived.—Scientific American.

MORE POLITICAL SCANDALS.

The public is getting tired of reading of political abuses in Manitoba and municipal malpractices at Montreal. But there are more to come. According to a staff correspondent of the Toronto Daily News a sensation is expected in the Province of Saskatchewan. He states that it is probable that at the next session of the Legislature the Conservative Opposition will demand an enquiry by Royal Commission into certain deeds of the Scott Administration. If the Government refuses a commission, it is stated, an appeal will be made over its head to the Lieut.-Governor, as was done in Manitoba. The contract for the Insane Hospital at Battleford is said to have been doubled by extras, and in connection with the Parliament Buildings in Regina serious allegations are made.

It is charged against the Liberal Government that the contract for the Parliament Buildings in Regina was given to Messrs. Lyall & Co. although they were in excess of the lowest tender by $113,000, and that they were paid over $750,000 in extras. It is further alleged that during the session of 1913 the liquor league raised $80,000 for the Liberals on the condition that Premier Scott should withdraw his prohibition bill. Of this sum $40,000 is said to have gone into the Liberal campaign fund for the next general election, and the other $40,000 is said to have been divided amongst certain Liberal members of the House, who forced the death of the bill by threatening the Premier to vote against it.

It is a relief to turn from this sordid picture to the utterances of Sir James Aikins, the new leader of the Conservative party in Manitoba. He declared that he favored not only that the course of justice should not be impeded and that retribution should be meted out wherever deserved without fear or favor, but further that the whole strength of the law and of the state should be invoked to compel restitution to the uttermost dollar of all moneys stolen. "If members of the Roblin Government had done wrong," he said, "it should be brought home to them. At such a time of crisis as this, when even the widow's mite was thrown into the great national cause, to steal from the public treasury was not only a crime—it was downright disloyalty and should be punished as such. They were invited by their opponents to 'vote Liberal and punish the grafters,' but what steps had been taken so far to punish the grafters? Not a writ so far had been issued." This is precisely the line The Intelligencer has taken all through this miserable business. Let all offenders be severely punished, no matter to which party they belong; and let us all try to free Canada from the charge of political corruption.

THE WELFARE OF TROOPS.

Although the Government has problems to solve, burdens to bear and new and frequent duties to perform which were never cast upon the shoulders of any previous Administration, they never lose sight of the welfare of our troops at home or abroad, in sickness or in health. That is their first care and well have they discharged this duty.

To care for our soldiers invalided home from the front, the Hospital Commission, recently appointed, have met and arranged a clearing hospital at Quebec. Here the soldiers, ill, wounded and convalescent, will be housed immediately on landing. After medical examination and treatment they will be apportioned among the many splendid homes and institutions placed at the service of the Government by patriotic institutions and individuals, until their health is restored. By this method all returning soldiers will be guaranteed the best of care until they are thoroughly fit to resume work.

Another matter to which the Government is paying close attention is the provision of good food for soldiers. Hon. A. E. Kemp, G. F. Gault and H. Laporte — the War Purchasing Commission—are exercising the closest scrutiny over the food supplied our troops in the instruction camps or on home service. The commission in making contracts for food call for the best and the price paid is accordingly. There is therefore no cause for inferior supplies, and regimental officers have been instructed to report at once any attempt to substitute inferior goods for the high class article contracted for and paid for.

Recently one of the commissioners discovered that ground coffee of an inferior quality was being furnished in one of the camps. At once he arranged that coffee mills be furnished each regiment, and nothing but whole coffee be taken from the contractors. By this precaution the coffee will always be fresh and the opportunity for substituting an inferior quality removed. Careful purchase and close scrutiny by this commission is giving to the men fitting themselves to fight for the Empire, food, pure, wholesome, and superior in all respects.

CURRENT COMMENT

The collection of copper domestic utensils has begun in Germany. Evidently some shortage of this metal is, at least, in sight.

The New York plumber who has been held as a spy in Canada probably takes comfort in the thought that this is the season when plumbers are not missed. —Vancouver Province.

Whatever the the conflicts of authority of the Eastland disaster, the public will insist upon a thorough uncovering of everything pertaining to that tragedy. The present investigators, whether federal or state, should keep cool.

Past, strategy of the Grand Duke Nicholas is the best indication that the present retirement of the Russians bodes ill for the Teutons. British critics have entire confidence in the man leading the Czar's forces.—Londonn Free Press.

At least, Germans might have been expected to show enough of the finer sensibilities not to turn the Lusitania sinking into a popular music-hall song. This exhibition is said to have been made all the more barbarous by especial gloating over one American victim, Vanderbilt.

The American people desire a sane Germany, but if they cannot have a sane Germany they certainly will not rest content with a maniac Germany running at large and trampling down all the rights and liberties of mankind. We know of no force that can compel sanity, but there are forces by which rational people can protect themselves from the depredations of the insane.—New York World.

The Sanford Clothing Company, of Hamilton, has just announced a most liberal proposition to its male employees. Every employee of the company who enlists has guaranteed to him the full amount of his regular wage for the term of the war. This means that the company will supplement the soldier's pay up to the amount that the man would earn were he at his job in the clothing factory. There is something very practical about such patriotism.—Calgary Herald.

The German contention that Roumania is not bound to prevent the transport of war material to Turkey and the attempt to crave in aid of this theory the case of the United States are particularly unhappy. Mr. Bryan has expressly stated in a public document that in one case only was the question of the transit of such material across United States territory raised, and that in this case permission for the transit was refused.—London Times.

It is a striking coincidence that on the day which brought with it the news of General Botha's triumph Lord Kitchener should have been speaking at the Guildhall, and making what is, we think, his first platform appeal for recruits. At Vereeniging these two famous soldiers were in command of armies which had been fighting each other for nearly four years. They are now comrades in a common cause, each doing their duty in the different tasks which the great war imposes on them. —Westminster Gazette.

Germany had pictured the Dominions standing aloof and indifferent, or seeking their opportunity to cut themselves off from the Empire. Today "they are bound to the Empire by stronger ties than ever before, and prepared to fight to the death for the maintenance of its integrity and the preservation of common civilization throughout the world," as Sir Robert Borden well said. So much at least Germany has done for the British Empire already. We are much mistaken if, before the end of the chapter, the new British brother-hood-in-arms will not have borne yet nobler and more enduring fruit.—London Daily Telegraph.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

Such warriors as those therefore are not capable of the shameful outrages of which they are accused. He who is even but superficially acquainted with our people in all its moral and intellectual strength, who has seen our youth and manhood imbued with heroism and Christian spirit of sacrifice marching to the battlefield, is not capable of harboring the monstrous idea that "barbarism" can find a home amid the German ranks.

The whole foul list of charges rests but on the profoundest, the most unpardonable ignorance of the real character of the German people.

What is past cannot be undone, but to prevent the future perpetration of such base calumnies there has now been formed an association, mainly composed of public men of the Catholic faith, which will exercise stern vigilance over our would-be traducers, and save the public in neutral countries from being further misled by the manufacturers of lies and libels.—Tagliche Rundschau

The Poets' Corner

THE SUMMONS

Britons, along the mighty world's highway,
Waken and throng, from mart and field and glen;
Now looms that day of wrath, the world's dread day,
Prophesied of old by ancient men—
Arise! Arise!

From every corner of the teeming earth,
Answer and gather; to her banners come;
Throw down the duty or the dice of mirth,
Responsive to the ominous battle drum.
Prepare! Prepare!

This is no hour for hesitating doubt,
Self-interest's greed, or base ambition's dream;
The grim red wolves of earth's worst war are out,
The iron menace and the balefire's gleam.
Enlist! Enlist!

The arrogant Hun against our ancient coasts
Would hurl his serried panoply of steel;
Across the world are heard the despot's boasts,
O'er Europe's lands his awful cohorts reel.
Arise! Arise!

Waken, if e'er you woke to any cause;
Now strikes the hour to conquer or go down;
To win for freedom, justice and God's laws,
Or sink before the cruel despot's crown.
Arise! Arise!

Go forth and battle as your fathers went,
Who never let a great cause thunder down;
Those wardens, wide, on each far continent,
Of Britain's ancient honor and renown.
Go forth! Go forth!

Go forth and fight; nor will you strive alone;
Earth's valiant ones will battle by your side;
And strength of all that strength your cause shall own,
The Lord of Hosts will in your vanguard ride,
Toward earth's high doom.

Captain Norman Grindley, drill instructor of Niagara Falls Protective Association, was presented with a purse of gold by the Home Guards on the eve of his departure for the Niagara-on-the-Lake camp, where he will train men for service at the front.

THE FIRST TROUSERS.

They Were Worn Skin Tight and Led Men to Pad Their Legs.

The advent of the silk hat led to the introduction of trousers. Knee breeches and silk stockings did not correspond with stovepipe hats. Try them now and see if you think they do. So reformers set themselves to work to devise some nether garments congruous with the new headpiece.

The result was trousers. There had, it is true, been some precursors of those inimitable garments. The Turk had worn voluminous twin bags on his legs, gathered and tied, bag fashion, at the ankles. The Cossacks, too, had found such things more convenient for horseback riding than any other garb, and "pantaloons" were used in armies, especially by the French. But none of these nor any other garment that was worn prior to 1815 could be described as genuine trousers.

The first trousers worn in London were of plain, light colored cloth, and fitted very tightly; almost as tight, we may believe, as those in this country a generation ago. In the second season striped and other figured cloths were used by some, but such trousers were regarded as quite plebeian and fit for wearing only in bad weather when the streets were muddy, or as a sort of rough outing garb at the seaside. A favorite material for trousers worn by men of fashion was an elastic stockinet, which fitted literally "skin tight." Beneath such garments, to supply the deficiencies of nature, men were not averse to wearing false calves and other paddings on their legs. Straps passing beneath the foot were used to keep the trouser legs held down in place.—Exchange.

DOPPLER'S LAW OF LIGHT.

It Proves That Our Solar System Is Whirling Northward.

The fact that our solar system is traveling northward at a rate of twelve miles per second has been determined by means of one of the most remarkable laws in the entire history of science, Doppler's law of light. Stand by a railway track and listen to a rapid train approaching. As it approaches the bell or whistle will increase the pitch of its sound and instantly lower the pitch of tone after it passes and recedes. When coming more waves enter the ear and less when it is departing.

Light consists of the action of waves on the retina of the eye. Our earth and sun, all bodies in the solar system, are moving to a point in the celestial vault not far from the star Vega, in the constellation Lyra, and, of course, receding from the opposite point of the sky. Waves entering the slit of the spectroscope from the northern stars are compressed—namely, more enter per second! and are dispersed toward the violet end of the spectrum, less enter from the southern stars and are dispersed toward the red.

Now, exalted mathematics, based on the laws of light, determine the extent of dispersion of waves toward the red or violet for each decrease or increase of motion of light emitting bodies, and the amount actually found by experiment confirmed the mathematical formulas—a proof that modern mind is expressing at a very exalted rate.—Edgar Lucien Larkin, in New York American.

Scaring the Conscience.

Of all her curious customs London cannot boast of a more singular one that that formerly so strictly adhered to at Holland House, one of the most historic old mansions in the British capital. The last of the Lords Holland shot himself during a fit of despondency. Everything pointed to a clear case of self murder, yet the Holland family could never be dissuaded from the notion that the old man had been murdered by some unknown assasin. Accordingly every night for years it was the custom for one of the family to go to the rear of the house punctually at 11 o'clock and fire a gun for the purpose, it is said, of "scaring the conscience" of the murderer. This curious practice is a relic of medieval days in continental Europe, and the case in point is probably the only instance where it has been noticed since the days of the crusades.

When Men Powdered Their Faces.

The use of powders for the hair and face, which began in the sixteenth century, infected the men. Henry III. had the habit of parading the streets of Paris, his face covered with white and red paste, like a faded coquette, and his hair filled with violet powder and scented with musk. Powders were made of all colors, and the infatuation was such that servant girls were afraid to be seen in public with their hair of the natural color and, not being able to buy that used by their employers, employed sawdust as a substitute.—London Mirror.

Dialect.

Miss Ritta—Aren't you fond of dialect poetry, Mr. Drestbeeph? Mr. Drestbeeph (of the Chicago Browning society)—Well, James Whitcomb Riley and Eugene Field do very well, but I came across some poems by a fellow named Chaucer the other day, and he carries it too far.—Life.

As a Class.

"Are all pawnbrokers on the water wagon?"

"What do you mean by such a question?"

"Well," they're always taking the pledge, aren't they?"—Baltimore American.

BRITISH WORKER LIVES IN WEALTH NEVER YET KNOWN

Illusory Prosperity of War is Producing Results in North

NEWCASTLE, Eng., July 20, (By Mail).—Tyneside's wonderful war prosperity slaps you in the face. It is amazing, staggering, and financially only in terms of millions sterling, a denomination in which I, like most normal people, am incapable of thinking.

But spilt the thing up smaller. Divide the miles of Tyne banks and their immediate hinterland into strips and square, as the Canadians divide their map. Cover these strips and squares with war workshops, war factories, coaling staithes, shipyards, gunshops, cartridge shops, shell shops, and the rest. Stuff each factory, shop, and yard with more men and women, almost all earning more money than ever they earned before.

Thus we are mentally reducing Tyneside's war prosperity into something like visible and appreciable terms—reducing it to unit form. Stand at some great factory gate, as I did on Sunday evening, and watch Tyneside workers in the unit. Even at the factory itself you can see some of the immediate reflex of this prosperity.

Workmen's Motor Bicycles

Of brand new bicycles, with spotless silver plate and enamel and immaculate, unscathed tyres, you could count scores in a few minutes. Motor cycles have become far from uncommon. Note the number of new watch chains and of new working "slops" with the native color still unwashed out of them. Also the number of new boots. Small points these, perhaps, but all of them are indicative of the abnormal prosperity Tyneside is enjoying.

Well-dressed girl workers poured out in scores from the tramway-cars that take workers to work on Tyneside both night and day. Their dresses were as good and as tasteful as those of the North Lancashire cotton weaver on her day off, and she is, of course, the best-dressed and best-paid woman worker in the world.

For a time as I stood there watching I imagined these girls must be clerks or typists, for each carried a leather attache case. But they came in such numbers that it was impossible they could all be clerks, so I asked the timekeeper at the works lodge the significance of the attache cases. "They carry their supper in those," he said. "But surely," I answered, "they are rather big for that purpose." "No," he answered, "you see, they probably have a big Thermos flask in them as well as something to eat. Scores of working folk bring their Thermos flasks to work with them now."

I wonder, in passing, whether as a result of this war prosperity that old-standing institution of the British worker, the metal tea can, is to yield place to the more modern flask. This is a subject for a minor poet in this "passing of the tea can."

Higher Living General.

But in scores of ways in the spending of Tyneside's great war wages is this tendency towards a higher standard of living apparent. Perhaps in clothes is this most marked. I have visited Newcastle in good times, normal times, and bad times, but never have I seen it so well dressed as I saw it on Sunday night last. The "Sunday parade" from the station to Town Moor was packed with young people, most of them working people dressed as I am sure they have not been able to afford to dress before.

My talks with some of the city's larger storekeepers confirmed this impression. The workers of Tyneside are buying more clothes and better than they have ever been able to buy. Boots, too, umbrellas and raincoats and jewellery, all show markedly increased sales. I walked into the jeweller's shop under my hotel, and the manager told me that of rings up to £4 and £5 and of watches and chains he had sold more than ever before. There was no doubt, he said, that the workers were spending the money they got and spending it freely. 'Our trade,' he said, "is the first to feel any shortage of worker's earnings and the last to feel any increase; and I knew very well from our takings just now that things are enormously good and that they have been so for some little time."

He added, "It's this way. The first week the man draws good money he will pay off any debts he has. Next week he will buy, perhaps, boots or new overalls, and after that it may be Sunday clothes, then the next week, perhaps, furniture. So when at last he comes buying jewellery you know he is really 'flush' and that many other storekeepers have already had their turn before your own came."

No Provision for Hard Times.

So general are these statements of abnormal takings by Tyneside traders, no matter whether they trade in luxuries or necessities, that it is quite evident the workers of Tyneside regard the future with no apprehensions and are making all they can of the present. If they could see ahead and see the aftermath of scanty years that must follow this war their spending just now could hardly fail to follow different lines. The luxuries that most of them are wearing and using and eating now will avail them little when these hard times come.

One must not defame a whole city and district for faults of a few, but on the part of a weaker few there is a good deal of hard drinking going on about Tyneside. Better buy gold boots studded with diamonds than share in some of the organized 'fuddling cruisers' that take place in Newcastle and elsewhere in the district on a Saturday night.

"Sobering" parties gather at several discreetly hidden little haunts after closing hours and seek to undo by lobster and oysters and mineral water the harm done by too much drink earlier in the night. I have seen this thing, and it is not a pretty sight. Peace time prosperity would afford no excuse for such work. How much less the sinister prosperity of war?

Europe's Gay Set Finds One Haven

Wealth and Fashion Shine More Replendent Than Ever at Evian-les-Bains

PARIS, Aug. 4.—The remnants of European unmobilized fashionables with a few expatriates from the New World are now gathered at Evian-les-Bains on the heights overlooking Lake Geneva and they are indulging in more extravagant revels, according to reports received in Paris from a reliable correspondent, that even when Monte Carlo, Deauville, Vichy and half a dozen other resorts rivaled each other in ante-bellum splendor. Though Evian is in French territory it has become a semi-neutral zone by a special arrangement of the authorities, so that there are no wounded to spoil the gayety.

The leading hotels are crowded. All the famous demi-mondaines—except those "resting" in concentration camps —who formerly launched the Paris models at the race courses and the Bois now dazzle Evian with the anticipation of forthcoming fashion openings. Among the visitors are a majority of the smartest women usually seen at Monte Carlo and Deauville.

One of the guests who is making for Evian one of the most successful seasons on record is Mme. Lise Radolin, considered the best-dressed woman in Paris, whose frocks, suits and hats are sustaining her reputation of preceding years. One of the glories of the Ritz, Armenonville and Auteuil, Mme Radolin, with the famous Mlles. Dartrix and Forzane, won the name of the three Graces. At the Monte Carlo Casino a few years ago Mme Bertrand of Brussels and Paris was a rival in beauty and confections. The absence of the admiring crowds that used to throng around them is the only clowd on the horizon. The Evian townsfolk, whose men are at the front, do not seem to have a proper appreciation of the visitors' brilliance.

The season's note was struck at the outset by Baron Mantascheff, the Russian petroleum king, who summoned his coiffeur from Paris to cut his hair at a cost of 1,000 francs ($200) The rest of the large Russian colony do their utmost to follow Baron Mantascheff's lead, but a group of wealthy Argentineans challenge their supremacy in extravagance. Despite Government requisitions, almost all the guests have their own automobiles and can make excursions to Switzerland's beauty spots by arrangement with the Swiss authorities. The mornings are generally thus spent. Boating on the lake is also popular.

The women wear silk Jersey sweater suits in mauve, gray and beige. The blouses have deep collars, edged with fur, with two bands of fur at the bottom of the sweater. The skirts are pleated. Others wear check skirts, with plain color sweaters. The hats are chiefly black or navy blue velvet, with beaded flowers. Splendid hand-crocheted antique beaded handbags are carried.

Afternoons there is music at the Casino Gardens, but the golf club on the mountainside is "the place" for tea. The dining rooms recall the zenith of the Deauville season at the Hotel Normandy. Among the gowns silver laces over white, black jet over black and steel beaded effects over silver gray are most worn. After dinner there is music in the Casino Gardens, trips to the Palais Royal, "The Revue of 1915" at the Casino Theatre following Gounod's opera "Mireille."

An election for a president of Portugal occurs on August 6th. There are two candidates.

My Corns
Were Ended This Way

Countless women have told other women about Blue-jay plasters. Now a million corns a month are ended in this scientific way.

Women who know Blue-jay do not suffer corns. When one appears, they put a Blue-jay plaster on it. That ends the pain. In 48 hours the corn is gone forever, with no soreness left.

If you can't believe it, ask your friends. Half of them have probably ended corns with Blue-jay. If you still doubt it, ask us for samples. Try them on corns of your own.

Don't coddle corns. Don't pare and keep them. Don't use old-time treatments. A famous chemist has made corns utterly unnecessary. That sort of torture is a thing of the past.

Mark Twain on Genders.

Our ability to personify a sea ship by using the pronoun "she" and to keep the Zeppelin in place as "it" brings out one strong point of our language. It is impossible to be so subtle in French, which has no neuter, or in German, with its arbitrary scattering of genders. Mark Twain gave as a typical instance of good German: "Wilhelm, where is the turnip?" "She has gone to the kitchen." "Where is the accomplished and beautiful English maiden?" "It has gone to the opera." Mark went on to observe that in Germany a tree is male, its buds female, its leaves neuter; horses are sexless, dogs male, cats female, including tomcats. "By some oversight of the inventor of the language a woman is a female, but a wife (weib) is not."—London Mail.

The Right Door and Another.

A junk dealer in an Indiana town had been persistently suspected of acting as a "fence" for stolen goods and finally was arrested on a charge of that kind. However, after a jury trial he was acquitted on a technicality. Commenting soon afterward with a friend on his acquittal, the junk dealer said, "A long experience in the junk business leads me to believe that the door of success is mighty close to the door of the penitentiary, and if a man is not careful he is likely to take the wrong door."—Indianapolis News.

Better Still.

"But," said a student of one college to a friend who was attending a rival institution, "your college never turns out gentlemen."

"Of course it doesn't," replied the other. "It allows gentlemen to go right on and graduate."—Providence Tribune.

Natural Enough.

Grubbs—Why does young Litebrane insist on wearing his hair pompadour? Stubbs—He can't help it. His hair, following the rule that prevails throughout nature, abhors a vacuum and seeks constantly to make its escape.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Great Triumph.

"Well, how did you come through that afternoon tea?"

"Came through all right. Didn't spill anything on anybody but myself."—Kansas City Journal.

GOOD MANNERS.

Little Acts That Speak Aloud About a Person's Breeding.

It is always the merest trifles rather than the big things of life which indicate the manners and tastes of the average person, says a writer in the London Chronicle. A glaring social error, a particularly rude action or tactless speech are not made with too great frequency, but other less obtrusive faults are often committed—sometimes solely through ignorance or want of thought.

It is just as grave a mistake to be too polite as to be abominably rude. The painstakingly polite person is very trying to encounter, for extremes often meet, and he generally succeeds in being actually ill bred. For instance, there is always the man who, in the mistaken idea that a woman should always precede him, allows her to fight her way into a crowded train, descend unaided and walk before him into a restaurant that is rather full.

Removing his right glove before shaking hands with a woman; raising his hat when he offers a damsel his seat in a car; carefully piloting his fair companion across a crowded street; walking on the outside of the pavement and refraining from sitting when talking to a woman who happens to be standing, are all instances of those little things which mark the good breeding and thoughtfulness of a man. Unfortunately in some cases these things do not come by instinct, but rather through the hard school of experience.

On the other hand, a woman requires to be just as careful of her manners. It is very exciting no doubt to talk loudly and initiate casual hearers into the mysteries of an intimate conversation with another woman. Unfortunately the listeners are only contemptuously impressed with the fact that the speaker is incapable of controlling her own voice.

It is usually either nervousness or thoughtlessness that prompts a woman to display her worst side to the world. She will take a seat that is offered to her in a crowded car without a word of thanks or else will make the chivalrous person feel still more embarrassed by a quick and emphatic refusal to profit by his generosity, or perhaps she will rush through swing doors without bothering to notice if any one is likely to be caught in the rebound, elbow people who are in her way, walk on the wrong side of the street or fail to remember that she must always bow first to her men acquaintances before they raise their hats.

Ives and a Billiard Ball.

The late Frank C. Ives, the great billiardist, was very proud of the peculiar strength of his right arm. Striking the ball with one quick, sharp blow of his cue, the ivory would strike eleven cushions while flying around the table. He beat "Wizard" Schaefer and Eugene Carter by three feet and nine inches.

Bob Fitzsimmons, who was credited with striking a blow that was compared to the kick of a mule, could barely touch nine cushions, while Jim Corbett made about eight, yet Ives weighed only about 145 pounds at the time.—New York Journal.

ONTARIO LEADS.

In Gold Production She Is Ahead of All Other Provinces.

In the report of the Bureau of Mines for Ontario for the year ended October 31st last the interesting fact is brought out that among the provinces of Canada, including the Yukon Territory, Ontario to-day has the largest gold output. In cold figures it means that Ontario produced in gold last year $5,529,767; British Columbia, $5,177,343; Yukon Territory, $5,125,396. The margin of lead is small, but it is pleasing when one recalls the celebrated Klondike rush of the late nineties.

The report itself presents a carefully prepared statistical review of mining development in Ontario from the year 1891, when the Bureau was established. In a little over twenty years the mineral output has increased from $4,705,673 to $53,232,311 in 1913, which is the record so far, while for 1914 the value of the mineral output was $46,295,959. About 1901 the phenomenal growth started, when the mines produced metals to the value of $11,831,086, and in 1906 the total reached $22,388,383.

In 1891 only fifteen mineral substances were produced in the Province; to-day there are thirty-two. While the Cobalt camp is thought to have passed its zenith (climateric is the word the metallurgists use), Porcupine has become an established camp of the low-grade type with the result in gold above noted.

According to the officials of the Department, the mining industry of Ontario seems to have stood the strain of the war well. While the production in 1914 fell off $6,936,352 from that of the previous year, that was largely due to the decline of the Cobalt camp, although a few mines actually shut down when the price of silver fell. The total metallic production last year was $33,345,291, and non-metallic $12,950,291, making a total of $46,295,959. Of this amount $15,284,701 was distributed in wages to some 20,530 employes.

After a year's trial the law providing an eight-hour day for underground miners has proved satisfactory, and the Minister of Mines, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, looks to the future with great confidence.

A Bit of Romance.

Mr. George Gordon Moore, of whom few people in this country have heard, is a Canadian millionaire and friend to Sir John French. He has just returned to Canada after a long stay with Sir John in France. Whether Sir John made him an honorary colonel or not, Mr. Moore does not say. Therein he differs from other Canadians who are friends of certain high military authorities.

Mr. Moore lives in Detroit, and has a home also on the Canadian side. He is not listed in "Who's Who" or in "Morgan," nor has his career ever been described in Canadian journals. Yet he is a remarkable man, and when he walks into one of the big financial houses in New York, he is shown into the inside office.

His friendship with Sir John French is his latest exploit. Some say he is Sir John's financial manager and that his influence with Sir John has caused curiosity and concern in high official places. In an interview, published in Detroit this week, he tells of German cruelties, and especially of how Canadian officers have been crucified by being nailed to the village crosses. He also pays a high tribute to the courage and valour of the Canadian troops who so gallantly held the line at St. Julien.

A High Price Per Acre.

Hon. Sir William Mulock has never posed as an authority on art, but he enjoys pictures and stories about artists. He is responsible for a story concerning the late owner of a very beautiful wooded estate of nearly a hundred acres in the north part of Toronto. A few years ago a Canadian artist painted a picture from a scene in this sylvan wilderness and asked the owner of the estate what he thought about buying it to hang in his home.

"How much do you want for it?" asked the owner.

The artist mentioned the price—a good one.

"Poh!" said the owner. "Quite impossible, sir! Why, that's more than I paid for the whole estate when I came here."

Big Loss From Insect Pests.

From careful calculations made by C. Gordon Hewitt, the Dominion Entomologist, it is estimated that the annual loss in Canada, due to the depredations of insect pests on field, vegetable, and fruit crops, live stock, stored grains, and forest products, is, on a conservative estimate, over $100,000,000 yearly. A very great portion of this loss could be prevented.

The prevention of this loss is largely a matter of knowing what insecticides and fungicides to use, when to spray, or how to apply the patricular poison or preventive. Different types of insects attack different plants, grains, vegetables, and must be dealt with in different ways.

Male Originality.

One very unique mode of giving to Red Cross fund, is that of an Alberta farmer. He offers to the highest bidder a young bull calf three weeks old, of the bluest of bovine blue blood. Perhaps he was irritated at the "shower"—the towel shower, the jelly and jam shower, and so on—which is the invariable feminine mode of contributing supplies, and was determined to prove that the masculine mind is much the more original. Anyway, he has made his gift, and any other male who also wishes to be unique and is tired of buying feminine rosettes can now purchase a thoroughbred bull calf to pin on his lapel in aid of the Red Cross.

A subscription of $25 has been received towards the proposal that a monument should be erected at Bowmanville to the men from that place who had fallen in the war.

PARACHUTE FOR AVIATORS

New Device Has Great Promise as Life-Saver

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—A representative of the British Embassy who sailed recently for England will present to the War Office the plans of a lifesaving device for aviators designed by a graduate of the United States Naval Academy. Mr. Carter, the inventor, who was for years a lieutenant in the naval reserve here, believes his device will give airmen a chance for life when their aeroplanes become stalled or break down high in the air.

Mr. Carter was seen today and would not go into details of the aerial life-saver, but he said a demonstration would be given by Robert Crawford, a Tennessee aviator who would drop one hundred feet into the water from an aeroplane. The device is a form of parachute, but the inventor claims for it that it becomes operative by simply pulling a string and that, unlike regular parachutes, it opens quickly in the air and is as affective for short as for long drops.

Mr. Carter said: "The apparatus I have designed is so constructive that by knowing a mans' weight he can be equipped with an appliance to land him at a desired speed.

"Actual test drops have been made in the presence of engineers and they have commented favorably on its lightness of weight and quickness of operation. Parachutes from balloons have required several hundred feet before they open. My machine, during tests, was fully extended and drawing before it had dropped twice its length."

One of the best aeronautical engineers in the country is now going over Mr. Carter's calculations and one prominent engineer has promised to examine the design and supervise further tests.

War Notes

The Cardinal-Cornwall canal patrol of the 59th Regiment has donated a chine-gun to the new 77th Ottawa Overseas Battalion.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. McEachy, of Chatham, have offered a machine-gun, with full equipment, to the 24th Kent Regiment.

A three days' canvas to raise $20,000 for machine-guns has begun at Brantford. Of this amount $7,000 has already been contributed and most of the rest promised.

Mr. J. R. Gordon, superintendent of the G.T.R. announced at Hamilton, that a machine gun association had been formed by the employees of that district and $4,000 had been subscribed.

The Orillia Town Council has passed a resolution urging the warden to call a special session of the Simcoe Council for the purpose of voting funds for the purchase of fifty or sixty machine-guns.

Post Office employees at Calgary decided to give the proceeds of one day's pay, amounting to $2,400, for the purchase of a machine-gun, the balance of the money to be devoted to the Red Cross fund.

The City Council of Berlin at a meeting contributed a machine gun to the Canadian forces and passed a resolution that the struggle for liberty made by the Allies should be continued to a victorious end.

The City of Ottawa is to give $25,000 for the purchase of machine-guns. Inquiries will be made of other cities as to procedure, and what has been accomplished along this line before finally disbursing the money.

The Town Council of North Bay, has decided on a grant of $960 for the purchase of a machine-gun. Senator Gordon will also present one, while the citizens are raising a subscription for a gun and field kitchen.

NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS

By

Mrs. Challoner, who was not strong enough for these household labors, found herself condemned to hem new dusters and mend old table-linen, to the tune of her own sad thoughts. Mr. Drummond found her sorting a little heap on the parlor table when he dropped in casually one morning—this time with some very fine cherries that his sister thought Mrs. Challoner would enjoy.

When Mr. Drummond began his little speech he could have sworn that there were tears on the poor lady's cheeks, but when he had finished she looked up at him with a smile, and thanked him warmly, and then they had quite a nice chat together.

Mr. Drummond's visit was quite a godsend, she told him, for her girls were busy and had no time to talk to her; and "one's thoughts are not always pleasant companions," she added, with a sigh. And Mr. Drummond, who had caught sight of the tears, was at once sympathetic, and expressed himself in such feeling terms—for he was more at ease in the girls' absence—that Mrs. Challoner opened out in the most confiding way, and told him a great deal that he had been anxious to learn.

But she soon found out, to her dismay, that he disapproved of her girl's plans; for he told her so at once, and in the coolest manner. The opportunity for airing his views on the subject was far too good to be lost Mrs. Challoner was alone; she was in a low, dejected mood; the rulers of the household were gathered in an upper chamber. What would Phillis have said, as she warbled a rather flat accompaniment to Nan's "Bonnie Dundee", which she was singing to keep up their spirits over a piece of hard work, if she had known that Mr. Drummond was at that moment in possession of her mother's ears?

"Oh, Mr. Drummond, this is very sad, if every one should think as you do about my poor girls! and Phillis does so object to being called romantic;" for he had hinted in a gentlemanly way that he thought the whole scheme was crude and girlish and quixotic to a degree.

'I hope you will not tell her, then," returned Mr. Drummond in a soothing tone, for Mrs. Challoner was beginning to look agitated. "I am afraid nothing I say will induce Miss Challoner to give up her pet scheme; but I felt, as your clergyman, it was my duty to let you know my opinion." 'nd here Archie looked so solemn that Mrs. Challoner, being a weak woman, and apt to overvalue the least expression of masculine opinion, grew more and more alarmed.

"Oh, yes!" she faltered; "it is very good—very nice of you to tell me this." Phillis would have laughed in his face and Mrs. Cheyne would have found something to say about his youth; but in Mrs. Challoner's eyes, though she was an older woman, Archie's solemnity and Oriental beard carried tremendous weight with them. He might be young, nevertheless she was bound to listen meekly to him, and to respect his counsel as one who had a certain authority over her. "Oh, you are very good! and if only my girls had not made up their minds so quickly! but now what can I do but feel very uncomfortable after you have told me this?"

"Oh, as to that, there is always time for everything; it is never too late to mend," returned Mr. Drummond, tritely. "I meant from the first to tell you what I thought, if I should ever have an opportunity of speaking to you alone. You see, we Oxford men have our own notions about things; we do not always go with the tide. If your daughters——" here he hesitated and grew red, for he was a modest, honest young fellow in the main——"pardon me but I am only proposing an hypothesis—if they wanted to make a sensation and get themselves talked about, no doubt they would achieve success, for the novelty——" But here he stopped reduced to silence by the shocked expression of Mrs. Challoner's face.

"Mr. Drummond! my girls—make a sensation—be talked about?" she gasped; and all the spirit of her virtuous matronhood, and all the instinctive feeling that years of culture and ingrained refinement of nature had engendered, shone in her eyes. Her Nan and Phillis and Dulce to draw this on themselves!

Now, at this unlucky moment, when the maternal fires were all alight, who should enter but Phillis, wanting "pins, and dozens of them,—quickly, please," and still warbling flatly that refrain of "Bonnie Dundee!"

"Oh, Phillis! Oh, my darling child!" cried Mrs. Challoner, quite hysterically; "do you know what your clergyman says? and if he should say such things, what will be the world's opinion? No, Mr. Drummond, I did not mean to be angry. Of course you are telling us this for our good; but I do not know when I have been so shocked."

"Why, what is this?" demanded Phillis, calmly; but she fixed her eyes on the unlucky clergyman, who began to wish that last speech had not been uttered.

'He says it is to make a sensation—to be talked about—that you are going to do this," gasped Mrs. Challoner, who was far too much upset to weigh her words truly.

"What!" Phillis only uttered that very unmeaning monosyllable; nevertheless, Archie jumped from his seat as though he had been shot.

"Mrs. Challoner, really this is too bad! No, you must allow me to explain," as Phillis turned aside with a curling lip, as though she would leave them. He actually went between her and the door, as though he meant to prevent her egress forcibly. There is no knowing to what lengths he would have gone in his sudden agitation. "Only wait a moment, until I explan myself. Your mother has misunderstood me altogethr. Never misunderstood me altogether. Never mind!"

"Oh," observed Phillis. But now she stood still and began to collect her pins out of her mother's basket. "Perhaps, as this is rather unpleasant, you will have the kindness to tell me what it was you said to my mother?" And she spoke like a young princess who had just received an insult.

"I desire nothing more," returned Archie, determined to defend himself at all costs. "I have been speaking to Mrs. Challoner about all this unfortunate business. She was good enough to repose confidence in me, and, as your clergyman, I felt myself bound to tell her exactly my opinions on the subject."

"I do not quite see the necessity; but no doubt you know best," was Phillis's somewhat sarcastic answer.

"At least, I did it for the best," returned the young man, humbly. "I pointed out things to Mrs. Challoner, as I told you I should. I warned her what the world would say,—that it would regard your plan as very singular and perhaps quixotic. Surely there is nothing in this to offend you?"

"You have not touched on the worst part of all," returned Phillis, with a little disdain in her voice. "About making a sensation, I mean."

"There it was that your mother so entirely misunderstood. What I said was this: If this dressmaking scheme were undertaken just to make a sensation, it would of course, achieve success, for I thought the novelty might taken. And then I added that I was merely stating an hypothesis by way of argument, and then Mrs. Challoner looked shocked, and you came in."

"Is that all?" asked Phillis, coming down from her stilts at once, for she knew of old how her mother would confuse things sometimes; and, if this were the truth, she, Phillis, had been rather too hard on him.

"Yes. Do you see now any necessity for quarreling with me?" returned Mr. Drummond, breathing a little more freely as the frown lessened on Phillis's face. He wanted to be friends with these girls, not to turn them against him.

"Well, no, I believe not," she answered, quite gravely. "And I am sure I beg your pardon if I was rude." But this Archie would not allow for a moment.

"But, Mr. Drummond, one word before peace is quite restored," went on Phillis, with something of her old archness, 'or else I will fetch my sisters, and you will have three of us against us."

"Oh, do, Phillis, my dear," interrupted her mother; "let them come and hear what Mr. Drummond thinks."

"Mammy, how dare you!—how dare you be so contumacious, after all the trouble we have taken to set your dear fidgety mind at rest? Just look what you have done, Mr. Drummond," turning upon him. "Now I am not going to forgive you, and we will not trust the mother out of our sight, unless you promise not to say this sort of thing to her when we are not here to answer them."

"But, Miss Challoner, my pastoral conscience!" but his eyes twinkled a little.

"Oh, never mind that!" she retorted, mischievously. "I will give you leave to lecture us collectively, but not individually; that must not be thought about for a moment." She had not a notion what the queer expression on Mr. Drummond's face meant, and he did not know himself; but he had the strongest desire to laugh at this.

They parted after this the best of friends; and Phillis tasted the cherries, and pronounced them very good.

"You have quite forgiven me?" Mr. Drummond said, as she accompanied him to the door before rejoining her siters. "You know I have promised not to do it again until the next time."

"Oh, we shall see about that!" returned Phillis, good-humoredly. "Forewarned is forearmed; and there is a triple alliance against you."

"Good heavens, what mockery it seems. I never saw such girls—never!" thought Mr. Drummond, as he took long strides down the road. "But Mattie is right; they mean business, and nothing in the world would change that girl's determination if she had set herself to carry a thing out. I never knew a stronger will!" And in this he was tolerably right.

FLOODS IS THE WEST.

Recent Inundations in Edmonton and Calgary Broke All Records.

For the second time in sixteen years Edmonton has been visited by a flood; and for the first time on record Calgary had a flood at about the same time as Edmonton. Usually these two western cities near the Rockies do things as far differently as possible.

There is, however, no direct connection between the flood at Calgary and the flood at Edmonton. Calgary's flood comes from the Bow River, which rises up among the glacial regions of the south Canadian Rockies and flows into the south Saskatchewan hundreds of miles below Edmonton. The flood at Edmonton is directly due to the north Saskatchewan, which is one of the most variable rivers in Canada for average depth.

The flood that came on Saturday night, June 26, was caused by a cloud burst and melting snows in the "Rockies." It sent the river forty-five feet and two inches above the low water mark; a seething, swirling flood, carrying shacks, houses, barns, and all manner of debris on its crest.

The total damage and destruction both to homes and manufacturing plants is variously estimated at from three-quarters to a million dollars. Some eight hundred families, representing two thousand people, were driven from their homes. The city damages, fortunately, were not heavy though several of the bridges were seriously threatened, and were long in danger. One of them, long the chief medium of connection between Edmonton and Strathcona, would have assuredly gone but for two long trains of freight cars heavily ballasted with sand standing upon it for a good twenty-four hours with powerful engines attached to drag them off at the first sign of collapse. Up the river several hundred yards stood the $2,500,000 high level bridge, looking down with indifference upon the raging flood, and with lofty pride at the traffic from the other bridges diverted over its spacious roads. In striking contrast, too, from the little buildings swirled in the flats below or filled with water to all depths were the $3,000,000 Parliament Buildings and the $2,000,000 Grand Trunk Pacific Chateau.

The second highest flood at Edmonton came in 1899, when the river suddenly jumped—almost in a single night—nearly 40 feet above low water mark. That flood was said to have been caused by a cloudburst in the Rockies, accompanied by very hot weather in the glacier-land where the Saskatchewan rises. It was accompanied by no heavy rains in the Saskatchewan valley. In fact for some years following, when heavy rains for months at a stretch made the trails impassable and all the creeks into rivers, the big river rose less than half the height it reached in the glacial flood of 1899.

Travelers down the Saskatchewan two years later saw the marks of that flood; thickets of shore willows beaten down flat, debris lodged in the crotches of poplar and spruce and heaped up on the juts of the islands. One of the most interesting relics of that outburst was part of the old Saskatchewan steamer, The North-West, which was carried down from Edmonton and smashed up on the journey, the wreckage strewn at various places along the bank as far as 200 miles below Edmonton.

War Names for Babies.

This war is destined to live in the memory of many young Canadians, who will in a few years realize that they have been given names of warriors and battlefields that figured prominent in the World War.

Canadian babies are being christened in honor of British and French heroes and statesmen. So far, none has been named for any of the Russians or Italians. Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions, is becoming increasingly popular. Kitchener, however, is the steady rock of the babies' names. Ever since the war began the babies that peeped into this vale of woe and warfare have been christened after the grim War Minister, and they are still at it. Lorraine, the province which the French are trying to recover, is also favored.

But some parents, according to General Sam Hughes and Col. J. A. Currie, are making a mistake. These Canadian warriors say there was no such battle as "Langemarck" in which Canucks fought. Canadian babies are, however, being named "Langemarck" in honor of the battle of St. Julien. Will the fond parents now rename their progeny "St. Julien?"

Russell Morrison, eleven years of age, was burned to death in his father's stable at Copper Cliff.

Lime in Agriculture.

One of the principal functions of the Chemical Division of the Dominion Experimental Farms is to attempt the solution of problems connected with the maintenance and upbuilding of soil-fertility.

Among the many valuable results so far obtained in these investigations is the demonstration of the vital part played by lime in the increase of a soil's productiveness.

The subject is treated in an interesting and practical way in Bulletin No. 80 of the Experimental Farms' regular series, by the Dominion Chemist, Dr. Frank T. Shutt, who discusses it under the following heads:

The nature of lime and limestone.

The agricultural functions of lime and its compounds.

Comparative values of lime compounds.

The application of lime compounds

The use and misuse of lime.

Sign Letters in Full.

The Postoffice Department calls attention to the fact that letters addressed to soldiers at the front should be signed by the writers in full. Where letters signed by Christian name only cannot be delivered owing to the addressees being missing, wounded, or dead, it is impossible for the Canadian postal service to return them to the senders. In view of this, the public is urged to fully sign all letters addressed to soldiers at the front, and in addition to this to indicate the name and address of the sender on the upper left hand corner of the address side of the envelope. In this way the return of letters should necessity arise, will be absolutely insured.

South Alberta Crop.

A conservative estimate by men familiar with crop conditions states the average wheat production of Lethbridge and adjacent districts this year should be, from present appearances, at least twenty-five bushels to the acre. Man, good farmers, especially where irrigation is available, anticipate yields of thirty to forty bushels, and in some cases higher.

Degrees of Pain.

There are degrees of pain, as degrees of faultfulness, which are altogether conquerable and which seem to be merely forms of wholesome trial or discipline. Your fingers tingle when you go out on a frosty morning and are all the warmer afterward; your limbs are weary with wholesome work and lie down in the pleasanter rest; you are tried for a little while by having to wait for some promised good, and it is all the sweeter when it comes. But you cannot carry the trial past a certain point. Let the cold fasten on your hand in an extreme degree, and your fingers will molder from their sockets. Fatigue yourself but once to utter exhaustion, and to the end of life you shall not recover the former vigor of your frame. Let heartsickness pass beyond a certain bitter point and the heart loses its life forever.—Ruskin.

Grants for Soldiers.

A homesteader serving as a soldier of any of the British or allied armies may have his time as such soldier counted in the reckoning on Dominion lands situated within the railway belt of British Columbia. The privilege was granted some time ago to homesteaders serving in the Canadian expeditionary forces, and has now been extended by order-in-Council to homesteaders serving in the allied armies. If such soldier is disabled, the patent will issue to him at once, and in the case of death it will issue to his legal representative.

UNWORTHY RECIPIENTS OF CHARITABLE AID

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

My dear Sir,—For many years I have been familiar with the very important duties and labors of love, performed by the charitable ladies of Belleville, connected with the dispensing of assistance to worthy poor families in Belleville. During this time I have found in many cases that these good ladies were imposed upon by a class of people whose whole efforts were to prevent the ward visitors from learning the truth with regard to themselves, and their families, and the actual necessity for relief. The result has been that not infrequently the funds donated by the city for charitable purposes have been given to unworthy people. This state of things was not the fault of the ward distributors, and I sincerely trust that I will not give offence to any of these good ladies who have given their time and their means, and used every reasonable effort to distribute the money only to deserving persons. But the great difficulty exists today, and always has existed, in the fact that it was absolutely impossible in many cases, for these good ladies to learn the truth. These professional beggars are invariably falsifiers. They prepare themselves and their children and their houses in such a manner that the visitor discovers squalid poverty, and is deceived, and gives money where it would not have been given had the truth been known.

Time and again I have warned ward visitors against people who have received aid when they did not deserve it. Let me give one instance. A certain family was visited at Christmas and the visitor found five baskets of Christmas cheer in the house which the family by their falsehoods had extorted; and I regret to say also, that in my opinion and with my knowledge of that family, that they should not have received any relief. The city is now employing Miss Bradley, a lady of well-known efficiency.

My view is that one of two things should be done by the city. First, I believe that before charitable funds should be awarded any family, that the matter should be laid before Miss Bradley by the distributors of that fund, with the request that she examine into the state of the family, and discover whether it is worthy of support; and that the ward distributor should act upon that report. The reason I assign is this: Miss Bradley being a city official can communicate with the police officers. She will have many modes of making efficient enquiries, and from this information and personal visits, ascertain the truth as to the existence of the necessity. No ward distributors or any number of ladies can possibly find out the facts as Miss Bradley can. Or perhaps the ladies might prefer to place the whole matter of giving in the hands of Miss Bradley, who would report directly to the Council, or to the ladies, as might be suggested.

I am strongly of opinion that with this war upon us, the heavy taxations that we shall necessarily be subjected to, that it is incumbent upon the Council to take all reasonable steps to provide for the proper and wise distribution of the charitable appropriation. We acknowledge with the deepest gratitude the self-sacrificing labors of the ladies; but the painful fact is, that there is so much imposition and fraud practiced by designing and importunate people that it certainly does require the careful and energetic action of some capable official.

Yours truly,

J. J. B. FLINT.

BRITISH SUBMARINE ACHIEVES MOST BRILLIANT FEAT

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4.—The latest exploit of a British submarine (officially announced recently from Petrograd) in sinking a German transport in the Baltic is of great importance in connection with the German operations in the Courland. The vessel was conveying reserves from Germany to Libau for the assistance of the hard-pressed army. The military critic of the Novoe Vremya emphasizes this fact because as a result of the British boat's feat, the maritime conveyance of German reinforcements may either cease or become extremely cautious.

German operations in the direction of Riga are not proceeding so smoothly as General von Buelow anticipated. The Russians are strongly holding the entire front from the sea to Bausk against all German attacks, while southward as far as Poneviezh they have hurled back the Germans.

United States Treasury receipts for July ran $16,000,000 behind expenditures. Working balance of approximately $1000,000,000 is still available, however, from all sources.

Western Ontario Crops Battered

St. Thomas District is Flattened, Wheat Sprouting, Hay Still Out

ST. THOMAS, Aug. 4.—Owing to continued heavy rains wheat fields in West Elgin are badly sprouted, and heavy loss is anticipated. Oat fields are badly knocked down. The bean crop is badly injured, and the outlook not very good. Corn is doing better. There is no rot in the potatoes yet. Many farmers have been unable to complete hay harvest.

The tremendous downpour of rain Tuesday night was general throughout Elgin county. Catfish Creek, at Aylmer, rose over two feet, rising one foot in three quarters of an hour. Farms around Port Burwell are all flooded. Elgin Chute, a Malahide farmer, crossed in his motor at 6 a.m. what is known as Stalter bridge, spanning a ravine, and had just barely cleared it when it was swept away in the torrent.

WAR ANNIVERSARY COMMEMORATIVE SERVICE

A service was held in Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church last evening, which was fairly well attended considering the inclement weather. The object of the meeting was to commemorate the anniversary of the proclamation of war by Great Britain against Germany. The presence of His Lordship Rev. Bishop Willard Brewing of Toronto in the city was an incentive to have him give an address which he did.

The Rector of the Church, Rev. A. M. Hubly presided over the meeting and took part in the services, which were in every respect commemorative of the occasion. Special prayers were said and appropriate hymns were sung.

Bishop Brewing gave an eloquent address. He referred to the war and the circumstances which led up to same, involving Great Britain. The latter nation he contended was perfectly justified in the position she had taken. The Bishop referred especially to the part Canadians had and were taking in the gigantic struggle and eulogized them for the services they had rendered. Whilst he did not make an appeal for enlistment he referred to those who had enlisted, referring to them as not only patriots, but heroes, who would be recognized as such by the citizens of Canada. His Lordship grew eloquent in referring to the past deeds of the British Empire and what it had done for religious liberties and freedom in the past. The present struggle was for the same principles and there was no doubt but that right and justice would prevail.

The address was in every respect most patriotic in sentiment and one which tended to be of infinite good to those who listened to it.

Drinks Death Dose When Out of Work

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—One girl died and another young woman is in a serious condition at the Western Hospital as a result of taking poison yesterday. Both cases were the result of despondency.

Miss Mary Clarkson, seventeen years, who roomed at 617 Gerrard St. east, was found dead in her room yesterday afternoon. She had swallowed a bottle of carbolic acid. Dr. W. A. Graham was called, but he was unable to render any assistance. She had been working steadily, it is said, for the Freyseng Cork Co., Ltd., 61 Sumach street, until last Friday, when she was discharged and was unable to get further employment. Deceased was born in Aberdeen and had no relatives in this country. Her body was removed to the Morgue.

In the other case Mrs. Maude Sampson of 112 Borden street took one tablet of bichloride of mercury. No reason could be ascertained last night for her despondency, as her husband, it was stated by the police, is employed in a newspaper office. She has a child six weeks old. A friend entering the house to visit her found her in an unconscious condition and summoned Dr. Margaret McAlpine. The patient was rushed to the Western Hospital by the police ambulance. She was about thirty years of age.

MRS. BECKER IS SILENT

No Intention of Making Statement to the Press

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—At her home today Mrs. Helen Becker, the widow of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, said:

"I don't know where the newspapers got the idea that I was to make a statement after the funeral of my husband. I have not now or at any future time any statement for the press. I never told anyone that I intended making such a statement."

Mrs. Becker said she had no plans for the future, but would in all probability rest up in some quiet place.

The Board of Education announced that no action would be taken against Mrs. Becker in view of her distracted condition when she lost her fight to save her husband's life.

Who Defended the Works?

By F. A. MITCHEL

When the Germans were beseiging Paris in 1871 one part of the force came to the very outskirts of the city and encountered a portion of the defenses, something like a revolutionary barricade blocking a street. There was only room for a single company, and its captain before making an attack stood off and, raising a pair of binoculars, examined the works.

They were composed of paving stones, pieces of timber and such other articles as had been brought together for an improvised fortification. But the captain could not see a single man on the parapet. This he did not like. There was the look of a trap about it. If he moved his troops forward he must do so over a distance of some 500 or 600 yards between two walls not thirty feet apart and straight as an arrow. He could not deploy his men by the flank, and as for scattering along the street they would be one behind another, and a shot would bring down every man in line.

Moreover, the captain noticed a dark spot in the works, which indicated that a single stone had been removed in the very center of the fortification. He assumed at once that the aperture was for the muzzle of a cannon, which would sweep the street, doubtless, with the scattering projectiles of the period. That meant that before a force of eighty men—the number under the captain's command—could reach the barricade a large proportion of them would be killed or wounded.

The captain called his first lieutenant, handed him his glass, directed him to take a look at the breastworks and then asked him what he thought about an attempt to carry them. The lieutenant examined the works, then, lowering his glass, remarked:

"What are the orders, captain?"

"The orders are to move forward."

"Then we must move forward, but those who live will have moved backward."

The captain's only response was an order to advance.

Shoulder to shoulder, the men marched on—for, as has been said, they could not scatter—till about a third of the distance had been traversed. Then a puff of smoke issued from the dark spot in the center of the works, and a storm of missiles broke upon the advancing line of Germans. A third of the company fell, and another dozen limped or staggered to the rear.

The rest pressed on, but a few minutes were lost in reforming, or, rather, closing, the gaps that had been made. With steady step they marched till they had covered half the distance between their starting point and the fort. There was light where the dark spot had been, and they knew that the piece had been retired to be reloaded. This gave them courage. It was an old fashioned muzzle loader, and time must be spent after every discharge in reloading. The captain gave the order to double quick, but before they had covered a dozen yards there came another hailstorm, and another twenty men were put out of the fight.

This was terrible slaughter, and the force recoiled. Some stood ready to retrace their steps; others started back. The second lieutenant stood in rear and, striking some of the fugitives with his sword, drove them back toward the enemy. The captain was among the wounded and lay in a pool of his own blood. The first lieutenant cried at the top of his voice "Forward, men!" [illegible] at the [illegible] of some thirty [illegible] to mak[illegible] the distance and storm the fort, though the move was now a forlorn hope, for he expected that on reaching it he would find it defended by double the number of those who were making the attack.

When within fifty yards of the barricade there came another storm of missiles. Half the Germans were laid on the stones of the street, while the other half broke and fled. The lieutenant called to them in vain. Preferring death to following them in flight he turned and ran forward to the fort expecting every moment to be shot down. He reached the barricade and with a pistol in one hand, his sword in the other, climbed to the summit. There he stood, bewildered by the sight that met his view.

Not a man was behind the stones. The gun which the recoil from the last shot had driven backward a few feet was there, a thin film of smoke issuing from its vent. Leaning against it was a girl about twenty years old. She looked up at the lieutenant as though expecting instant death. Involuntarily he uncovered.

"Mademoiselle," he stammered in broken French, "where are the men who have been defending this barricade?"

"I have been defending this barricade, monsieur," was the reply.

"You—alone?"

"I—alone. Through a blunder the force that was to have held this work was ordered elsewhere."

"Mein Gott! Has a whole company been driven back by a—a girl?"

At this moment a company of French soldiers came around a corner at double quick. The lieutenant succeeded in making good a retreat, hearing cheers behind him:

"Vive mademoiselle!"

Having joined his commander, he led them again to the attack and finally captured the barricade. He looked for the girl who had defended it alone but she was not there.

Washing the Dishes.

"Yes, some of us fellows keep house at the fraternity home."

"Don't you hate to wash dishes?"

"We don't have to. We have plenty of candidates for the fraternity, and dish washing is great as an initiation stunt."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Babe as Recruiting Agent.

Missionary work being carried on by the Mississauga Horse in recruiting visits to various parts of Toronto and to neighboring towns is winning many. They opened a recruiting office Wednesday at Norway, where they obtained the use of the parish schoolhouse of St. John's Church, whose rector, Rev. W. L. Baynes-Reed, is chaplain of the regiment, and expects to go with it overseas. Most persuasive of the Mississaugas' recruiting officers there was his little four-year-old daughter, an enthusiastic supporter of her daddy's regiment, who patrolled Woodbine avenue in patriotic attire with a vigilant eye for prospective recruits. The results proved satisfactory.

A New Knight.

H. L. Drayton, K. C., who was made a knight-bachelor on the King's birthday, has now been chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada for three years. He was born in Kingston, Ont., and became a barrister in 1891 and a King's counsellor in 1908. He was for a time city solicitor and county attorney of Toronto, but resigned both offices. In 1910 he was appointed corporation counsel of Toronto, and the following year was appointed a representative of the city of Toronto on the commission of the hydro-electric affairs. He succeeded the late Judge Mabee as head of the Railway Board.

To Berlin and Back.

Captain W. M. Hart, of the C.A.M.C., Winnipeg, boasts that he is the only Canadian who has been to Berlin and back since the war started, but he admits that his impressions of the Kaiser's capital were only fleeting, though sufficient to make him detest the Teutons.

Together with a territorial medical officer, he was one of a party of British exchange prisoners who recently reached England. During the Ypres attack at the end of April, Capt. Hart was attached to the 5th Battalion, Western Cavalry, and had care of the wounded. With the commanding officer he went to procure ambulances, which they were successful in obtaining, but a blocked road rendered passage impossible. Captain Hart went forward alone to rejoin the wounded, but was taken prisoner on an open plain by a group of Germans.

He was first sent to an internment camp at Mainz, and afterwards to Danholm, a small island in the Baltic. The conditions at Mainz were wretched, the bread being much inferior to the war bread used by the population, while the meat supplied seemed to be horseflesh. Captain Hart and his companions chiefly subsisted on food mailed by friends. A sample of the loaf served out was brought back by Captain Hart, and is now displayed in the window of the Canadian Immigration Department in Trafalgar Square, London.

Sea Water Salt.

The salt industry of San Francisco bay is one of farreaching importance, and the method of production is simple in its operations since the finished article is the result of evaporating the sea water. Claim is made that more salt is thus made here than anywhere else in the world. Water is collected in prepared shallow ponds, where, after evaporation has been completed, the salt is shoveled into small railway cars, taken to the refining works, remelted and crystallized out in vacuum pans. It is washed and cleaned. About a year elapses from the time the sea water goes into the ponds until the product is ready for the market, because the evaporation from the surface of the ponds is only about twenty-eight inches a year, over and above the natural rainfall. The process usually starts in May or June of each year, so as to take as much advantage as possible of the warm period of the summer.—Argonaut.

What We All Think.

"I'm glad to know that you liked my sermon," said the minister to an enthusiastic member of his flock.

Vol.48 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, FRIDAY, AUGUST, 6, 1915. No. 373

Western Campaign

Full Explanation of Why Such Little Progress is Being Made

PARIS, Aug. 5.—An explanation of why so little progress is being made in the French and Belgian war zones so far as actual ground gaining is concerned is afforded in a statement from unquestionable authority in which the almost insurmountable difficulties of the present struggle are set forth.

"During the last six months," says this authority "from the North Sea to the Swiss mountains, there has been siege warfare along the length of the broken line of trenches. In this warfare all strategic manouevres are absent, because manouevres are impossible on ground where every square meter is marked and swept by artillery fire. The only alternative is a frontal attack. Such an attack is smashed to pieces in one part or another against the formidable organizations of defence, in which all the resources of art and science have been employed by the two adversaries.

"In concrete subterranean works, armored and casemated, flanked with rapid firers and mortars, and linked to one another by marvelously concealed communicating trenches, which are protected by the fire of heavy bateries, dwell the infantry abundantly provided with rifles and hand grenades. To take possession of one of these works it is first necessary to dismantle these trenches and destroy the material which they shelter. This is the artillery's task.

Shells Required Are Revelation

"No one before the war could have imagined the vast amount of shells required. Several thousand shells fired during a few hours on a restricted space announce an attack for which this preparation is being made.

"But no matter how numerous the heavy guns or how well directed their fire, it often happens that the preparation has been insufficient. One or two rapid firers mow down the troops who climb from the trenches ready for the charge, and after suffering heavy sacrifices the attacking party arrive at the first line of the trenches of the enemy. The opposing artillery, with a liberal wall of fire, effectively prevents any reinforcements from advancing to their support. They must fortify the captured trenches, being subjected the while to a much more accurate bombardment, as the enemy knows the exact range of their former positions.

"Such offensive movements could not be multiplied nor prolonged indefinitely, as much on account of the moral and physical effort which they demand of the men as on account of the losses which they involve. Neither can such offensives be improvised. Before beginning an attack, large quantities of material and projectiles must be gathered in one place previously appointed by the commander, advanced fortifications dug, and the ground minutely studied.

Every Western Offensive Costly

"If, despite these difficulties, the French army renews an offensive at the price of a bloody sacrifice, it is with the conscientious mission of holding large enemy forces on the western front. By the Marne victory it stopped the invason and ruined the first German plan, which was first to shatter France and return then against Russia.

"By the victory of the Yser, with the aid of the allied armies closing the line of defence, it effectively prevented the enemy from getting a foothold in Pas de Calais.

"By continuous offensive actions from February to July in Champagne, the Argonne, and Artois, it demoralized approximately 2,000,000 men and captured an enormous amount of material. Without allowing the enemy an instant's respite, it forced the German general staff to utilize on the western front reserves in barracks and arsenals.

"It would be a serious mistake to measure our effort by the ground conquered. The demoralization and tearing down of the German army is the real goal.

"We have attained this goal, since it has been proved that during these six months the enemy has suffered heavy losses, and taking everything into consideration he can only remove from our front eight per cent. of his total effectiveness.

PORT SYDNEY, Muskoka, Aug. 5.—(Special)—Five Toronto people met death here this afternoon under tragic circumstances. They were passengers in the last automobile—a touring Ford—of a five-car holiday excursion party. Hastening homeward in a driving rain the ill-fated car struck the 600-foot floating bridge over the north end of Long Lake, slued half way over, crashed through the four-foot railing, and plunged into the twenty-six feet of water.

There were eight passengers. All sank with the car, trapped by the storm shields and cover. Henry R. Alley and his nine-year-old son, Fred. Miss E. M. Lawson and her nephew, Angus Lawson, and Beverley Swabey, were drowned. Harold Swabey and Douglas Lawson, both about thirteen years of age, escaped. John Clarke, the owner and driver, was also saved. Clarke lives at Utterson.

THREE STRUGGLE TO SAFETY

All the victims were summer visitors at the Clyffe House. The party was returning from an automobile trip, and the ill-fated car was about three-quarters of the way across the pontoon bridge when it dashed over the side. There was not a moment's warning. The people went down with the car. Clarke, the driver, and the two young boys, managed to release themselves and rose to the surface. Grasping the bridge, they pulled themselves out.

Mr. J. P. McNalley, who lives near the scene of the accident, saw the tragedy and rushed to the scene. Seeing that he could do little himself, he telephoned the hotel, and in a few minutes citizens and summer visitors arrived in cars. Several of them, including Albert Bell, dived. Their efforts at first were unsuccessful, and it was nearly an hour before the first body, that of Angus Lawson, was brought to the surface. Dr. Porter, who was passing, did all in his power to revive the boy, but was unable to resuscitate him. Grapling irons had meantime been obtained from Port Sydney, and at 6 o'clock the last body had been recovered.

FASTENING THEMSELVES IN.

According to the statement of Dr. MacDonald, Coroner, when the accident occurred the occupants were fastening on the side shields of the car to protect themselves from the rain. In the front seat with the driver was Miss Lawson, who had the boy Swabey on her knee. Mr. Alley and the others were in the back seat.

The auto in plunging into the water did not overturn, and was found upright by the divers in the bottom of the lake. It was pulled out this evening.

TEARS HIS WAY OUT.

Douglas Lawson, one of those who escaped, said that as soon as the car struck the railing he commenced to tear his way out, and continued to battle until the car settled on the bottom. Pulling himself through the side he rose to the surface and grabbed the bridge.

Dr. MacDonald opened an inquest this evening and adjourned until Monday afternoon. All five bodies were taken to the Town Hall at Utterson, where they lie tonight, with Constable Brown in charge.

Dr. MacDonald said last night that Mr. Alley's watch, which he took from his clothing, was stopped at precisely three oclock, which also the time given by others as to when the accident occurred. The last body recovered was in the water three hours.

The floating bridge is maintained by the Government, and during the summer months carries very heavy traffic. It is kept together by cables. The lake is one mile west of Utterson. The other cars of the auto party were some minutes ahead and did not know of the accident until they reached the hotel.

SERVED WITH FOUR MINISTERS

Henry R. Alley was one of the most prominent educationists in Ontario. He had been Private Secretary to four Ministers of Education, starting with the Hon. Adam Crooks in the Mowat Government. He was Secretary to Hon. George W. Ross, then Minister of Education, and when the latter became Premier he remained as Secretary to Hon. Richard Harcourt, who succeeded in the portfolio of Education. He was also for a short time with Hon. Dr. Pyne, the present Minister of Education, as Secretary. Shortly after the Whitney Government came into power he was appointed Libraian of Department of Education at the Normal School. This position he held until the present. All told he had been in the service of Ontario's Education Department for over 30 years.

Mr. Alley was about 65 years of age. A son, Capt. Herbert Alley, is at the front. He was wounded during a recent engagement. He left Toronto with the Queen's Own Rifles as a Litutenant and was promoted while on service. Mrs. Alley also survives. She was with her husband and young son at the summer resort, where they had gone last Saturday to spend the month of August. She did not accompany the auto party on its trip.

Miss E. M. Lawson, who was about 30 years of age, was a sister-in-law of Dr. J. W. S. McCullough, Secretary of the Provincial Board of Health, who resides at 61 Beaty avenue, but who is now at Niagara-on-the-Lake in charge of the health department of the camp. Miss Lawson lived in Parkdale, and was the aunt of both Angus and Harold Lawson, who resided with her. She was spending a few weeks' holidays in Port Sydney with her aged mother, who survives.

Miss E. M. Lawson resided with her aged mother and her nephews, Angus and Douglas, at the residence of Dr. Hart, 179 Dowling avenue, Parkdale.

A tragic feature of the case is that the parents of the lads, one of whom was drowned, met their death by accident in England.

GERMAN SPY ABOARD CANADIAN TRANSPORT

Disguised as Nun and Shared Cabin of Girl Who Found Him Shaving

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—How a German spy, disguised as a nun, was drowned at sea aboard a Canadian transport, after he had occupied a stateroom with an unsuspecting English girl, was told in a letter received here today by friends of Lorne Cameron, son of Sir Douglas Cameron, former Governor of Manitoba.

"We were taking a young English girl home," said the letter, "and the boat was crowded. The only accommodations the girl could obtain was half the stateroom of a sweet-faced nun.

"The third night out, our friend woke up and saw the nun crouched before a small mirror—shaving."

All Animated With Same Aim Bonar Law Says

Secretary of State for Colonies Reviews Canadian Troops

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Rt. Hon. Andrew Bonar Law, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, yesterday afternoon reviewed the officers and men forming the Second Division of the Canadian Expeditionary Force and the contingent to provide reinforcements for the troops from the Dominion already at the front.

The magnificent manhood from Canada, in massed formation, made an impressive and inspiring scene. Every province of the Dominion was represented in the splendid fighting force assembled. The troops were reviewed in two parts, the first at Bargrove Farm on the Beechborough Estate.

Mr. Bonar Law travelled from London with Major-Gen. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Gen. Carson, Col. David Watson, Sih Max Aitken and Doctor Bruce of Toronto. Heavy showers at intervals did not interfere with the precision of the troops, and battalion after battalion was cheered as it passed the saluting point.

General in Command.

The general in command was Gen. Steele, accompanied by Col. Depree, Col. Thatcher, Col. Garnet Hughes, Capt. Montague, Major Ker, Major Homer Dixon and others of the Headquarters Staff. The division comprised the 5th Infantry Brigade from Ontario; the 5th Brigade from Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, the 6th from Western Canada, mounted troops artillery, engineers, and members of the signal, supply, transport, and medical services.

Immediately Mr. Bonar Law and Major-Gen. Hughes arrived at the saluting point a general salute was given the combined bands of the 4th Brigade playing the Maple Leaf and O Canada. Having proceeded up and down the long lines of troops in a motor car, Mr. Bonar Law and Major Gen. Hughes returned to the saluting point, and the march past of infantry commenced in a column of platoons.

From all Canada

When the last brigade had passed Mr. Bonar Law, with Major-Gen. Hughes and Gen. Steele went to Sir John Moore Plain to review the additional thousands of Canadians, including the mounted troops, artillery and infantry being trained as reinforcements. As in the case of the Second Division, the officers and men were drawn from all parts of the Dominion, and another picturesque scene was witlessed as they marched past, particular interest being centred in the battalions of Highlanders with their bands of pipers and the Eaton Machine-Gun Brigade. Many men who had been wounded in France, but who had recovered were included in these reserves.

Fortunately the rain ceased during this review, and on the conclusion of the march past the officers assembled as the saluting point, where Major-Gen. Hughes introduced them to the Colonial Secretary.

With Same Feeling

Mr. Bonar Law remarked that if he were to say how much pleasure he had had in witnessing the review it would express very poorly what he felt. A year had passed since war was entered upon. Nothing in connection with it had shown more clearly to his mind what they were fighting for was worth all they paid for it, or might yet pay for it, than the fact that he had seen on that occasion men from every part of Canada all animated with the same spirit and feeling as strongly as anyone in the United Kingdom that the fight was theirs as much as Britain's, and it was a fight for everything which freeborn men had always prized.

The world knew, Mr. Bonar Law said, what the Canadians already had done at the front. They knew what they had suffered and knew everyone was prepared to face the same danger and to give the same good account of themselves when the opportunity came in fighting against the enemy.

Cheers for the King and the Colonial Secretary concluded the review.

Massacres By Tarks Encouraged by Germans

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The Chronicle says: "The Germans, who are masters of the administration of affairs at Constantinople, have, to their everlasting shame, not only permitted, but encouraged massacres by Turk and Kurds of Armenians in Asia Minor, which have been worse than any which occurred under Abdul Hamid.

"The Allies have notified Turkish officials that they will hold them personally responsible, and at this stage they can do no more.

"There is perhaps room for an effective American protest, though we have not yet heard of one.

WOUNDED CANADIAN BLEEDING FOUR DAYS

A resident of West Toronto has received a letter from England in which the following incident is related:

The Manchester Regiment attacked a trench which had formerly been attacked by the Canadians and found in the trench a wounded Canadian in charge of a German soldier. The Canadian was soaked in blood from a wound in the knee and had been four days without attention. The Manchesters wanted to bayonet the German, but were restrained by their officer. They then took the wounded man and the German to the Canadians, saying. "Here is the man who had charge and left your mate there without attempting to bind up his wound for four days."

The man who told the story was a sergeant in the Post-Office Rifles.

Gabriel is expected to play the last trump in the game of life.

A good deal of conversation should be canned and the can thrown away.

Lloyd George Says Teutons are Hammering Sword That Will Destroy Them

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Speaking to 10,00 Welshmen at Bangor this afternoon before he heard of the fall of Warsaw, David Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions, referred to the situation in the east in these terms:

"I view it with anxiety but not with dread. I can see a ray of hope in the dark horizon—the regeneration of the great people of Russia. Our enemies do not understand what they are doing in the east. Their mighty cannon are shattering the rusty bars that fettered the soul of Russia.

"Look at Warsaw. What is happening behind that? The Russian people are shaking themselves free of stifling debris, their mighty limbs preparing with new spirit and new hope for a new land.

"Austria and Prussia are doing today for Russia what their military ancestors did for France. They are hammering a sword that will destroy them."

OUTBREAK OF FIRE IN BELLEVILLE GARAGE

McLaughlin Carriage and Garage Premises the Scene—Two Automobiles, a Carriage, Two Buggies and Two Cutters Burned—Cause of Fire Unknown

At a few minutes after 5 o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the McLaughlin Carriage and garage premises situated on the corner of West Bridge and Coleman streets, Belleville, and as a result considerable damage was done, not only to the building, but two automobiles, the frame of another car, two new buggies, and a carriage were destroyed.

The fire originated in what as termed the charging room, situated on the second floor, facing Coleman street. How the fire started appears to be a mystery. Adjoining the charging room was the repair shop of the establishment and it was there that the cars and vehicles were burned. As soon as the fire was discovered an alarm was sounded, and in a short time the brigade was upon the scene. Chief Brown was not long in having three lines of hose laid and three good streams were played upon the flames, which fortunately were confined to the charging and repair rooms. Below these rooms on the ground floor were some 14 cars but they were not damaged by fire, but some water poured upon them. At one time it was feared the building would be destroyed but the excellent work of the fire brigade under the capable superintendency of Chief Brown prevented this.

The cars burned were the property of Mr. Thomas Thompson, furniture dealer of this city and Lieut. George Bateman of Springbrook, Rawdon Township, who is attached to the 39th Battalion and at present is in England. Mr. Thompson's car was insured, but it is not at present known whether Lieut. Bateman's car was insured or not. A double carriage, the property of Col. Lazier, of this city, was burned, also new buggies, and two cutters, the property of the McLaughlin Company. A body of an automobile was destroyed also some shafts, poles and other parts of vehicles.

Mr. P. J. Lee, the local manager of the concern estimates that the loss to the building was about $1000 and the loss to contents upwards of $3000. The building is the property of the McLaughlin Carriage Company and was insured. Only slight damage by water and smoke was sustained to the show room and offices. The fire will in no way interfere with the business of the concern, which was conducted today, as if nothing had occurred.

Mr. R. McPherson, wood carver, has a work shop on the second floor, adjoining where the fire broke out, but he sustained no damages.

MR. WISE GUY

Mr. Wise Guy sat beside the road watching his chauffeur doctor a puncture. Presently a farmer leading a youthful calf, passed.

And Mr. Wise Guy was mean enough to threaten to fire the chauffeur for laughing.

CHEESE BOARD MAY GIVE MACHINE GUN

Board Unable to Finance One and Assistance Will Likely be Asked of Factories

A stirring appeal for aid in some form for the cause of the Empire was made yesterday afternoon at the meeting of the Frontenac Cheese Board by the Secretary, Mr. William Pillar. In his address he told the members of the board that something should be done for the soldiers at the front. He told that he had been in communication with the authorities on the matter of procuring a machine gun for the 54th Battalian and it was found that the board could not finance one.

It is likely that assistance will be secured from the factories in the vicinity and that the cheesemen will be represented on the firing line by a splendid machine gun from the cheesemen of Frontenac.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Forty recruits were received from Belleville for the 59th Battalion yesterday.

There are 40 officers taking the course of provisional school of infantry. Major Barragar is assisted in the instructional work by Sergt. Dryden and Sergt. Gilliece of the camp in-structional staff. Both instructors have had long experience in instructional work and are very capable men.

Major Wilson will go to Lindsay tomorrow on an inspectional tour.

There is a strong feeling among the officers in camp that St. Andrew's Church should not accept the resignation of its minister, Captain Crompton, but that he should be granted leave of absence until the war is over and he is able to return to the city. Captain Crompton's out-spoken patriotism has made him many friends in camp, and they all feel that the "Auld Kirk" should keep a string on such a man, and feel proud that its minister was serving under the colors.

Last night there was a dance following the mess dinner at the Headquaters, and the officers of the mess made it clear that no eligible young man in civilians would be allowed to take part in the dance. They feel that young men who should be wearing uniform and serving their King and country should not be permitted to enjoy any military privileges provided by officers.

A Brave Rescue

Boy Saves Young Lady from Drowning at Bon Echo

Miss Mary Armstrong went bathing on one of the beaches at Bon Echo, Ont., and waded out beyond her depth, and being unable to swim, she went down. Fortunately a lady guest saw her and called for help. Harold Ward, aged 14, son of the late Dr. Ward of Napanee, was near at hand and the first to respond. Harold is a good swimmer, and dashing in, brought Miss Armstrong safely ashore.

The guests of Bon Echo Inn were so impressed with the cool bravery of the lad, that an impromptu function was given in his honor around a huge bonfire and Judge Madden of Napanee, in an eloquent and touching address, presented Master Ward with a purse on behalf of Bon Echo and its guests.

Five Millions Now as Damage In Erie Floods

ERIE, Pa., August 5.—Working in relays under a scorching sun, police, firemen and volunteers to-day continued their search in the masses of wreckage piled along Mill Creek by Tuesday's storm for the bodies still believed to be in the debris.

One body was recovered during the night, that of a foreigner, although there were many reports of other finds. The body was taken to the morgue, to which place the others had been removed, and it was then seen that twenty victims of the disaster had been identified, although it was known that at least fifteen more had been lost.

Forty Others Lost.

Figures compiled by the authorities lead to the belief that at least forty others have been lost, the majority, it is thought, being in the foreign section around Ninth street, where many foreigners lived in two or three houses that were washed away.

The naval militia was called out to reinforce the National Guardsmen on duty guarding the stricken section, and sightseers were kept away from the working gangs.

Estimates of the damage continue to mount as the extent of the flood becomes apparent. Where yesterday it was believed that $3,000,000 would cover the loss, it was to-day asserted that probably $5,000,000 would be nearer the correct estimate.

Mayor Stern announced that he had received offers of relief from many cities, but he thought the city of Erie would be able to take care of its own expenses.

FORCING ITALY'S HAND

ROME, Aug. 5.—The situation and incidents that preceded the outbreak of the Italo-Turkish war in 1911 are being duplicated daily in the form of provocation by Turkey and protests and impatience on the part of Italy. The newspapers say openly that the limit of patience has been reached and that the time to take drastic action has arrived. Public opinion will approve any measure the military authorities decide to adopt.

For nearty a month a number of Italian consuls in Turkey have been prevented from communicating with the ambassador at Constantinople and their fate is unknown.

BEULOW'S BROTHER SLAIN

AMSTERDAM, via London, Aug. 5. —According to the Berlin newspapers, Major General von Buelow, brother of the commander of the Niemen army, was buried Tuesday at Berlin. He was commander of the Fifth Brigade of the Guard Infantry and was mortally wounded in battle recently.

Western Harvest Set Forward

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 5.—The last report on crop conditions issued by the Canadian Northern Railway suggested August 15 as the date for start of wheat cutting in most parts of Manitoba and Augus 24 to 27 in northern parts of Saskatchewan and Alberta. A report issued today shows a gain of from five to six days, no doubt due to the wonderful weather of the past fortnight, and this sets the start of cutting in Manitoba at about August 10, and in the other two Provinces about August 20. Between August 20 and September 1 harvesting will be general everywhere.

Crops are reported excellent, and a large yield is expected in most districts. The general average of wheat, it is stated, will be about 25 bushels per acre, some points reporting probably yields as high as 30 bushels, while others expect at least 20.

Barley will average 35 to 50 bushels per acre and oats 40 to 60. Barley cutting has started in some districts of Manitoba. Minto district, in Manitoba reports that owing to insufficient moisture the crops will be light, wheat averaging 12 to 15 bushels per acre. This is a very exceptional instance, however.

About the same figures are mentioned as probabilities in Alberta and Saskatchewan. "Conditions are ideal," is report from many points.

A crop report also issued today by the Grand Trunk Pacific summarizes conditions in this way: "Situation for the past week over the entire line is reported very satisfactory. With warmer weather, the wheat crop has improved considerably and with the continuance of favorable weather harvesting should be general during the last two weeks of August."

SAM NESBITT BUYS YOUNGSTER

Sam Nesbitt, the well-known breeder of thoroughbreds, has added to his string through the purchase of the two-year-old Dalpheen Dawson. This filly has started only once or twice and has shown a good burst of speed. She is a bay filly, well set up and a half-sister to Mahogany, being sired by Dorante out of the mare Intermezzo. Mr. Nesbit is also the owner of Dorante, he securing him at a sale almost a year ago. The horse is now being used in Montreal for stud purposes.

Intermezza, the dam of the recent acquisition to the Nesbitt string, is by imported Meddler out of the mare Flageoletta, by imported Rayon d'Or. Dalpheen Dawson will not likely be raced by her new owner, but kept as a brood mare.

WOMAN IS IDENTIFIED

Slight hopes are held out for the recovery of the woman who was found in an unconscious condition on the G.T.R. tracks near Logan avenue, Toronto, on Wednesday evening and removed to St. Michael's Hospital by the police ambulance. She was yesterday identified by relatives as Mrs. Elizabeth Youles, 261 Booth avenue. Friends scout the theory of her injuries being due to an assault. They believe, however, that Mrs. Youles, whose hearing is defective, was struck by a train as she was crossing the tracks on her way to her home on Booth avenue.

Last evening, about six o'clock, a buggy driven by Wilbert Bateman on Mill street was run into by an automobile. The front axle was badly bent but neither horse or occupants injured. The horse vehicle was on its proper side of the road and two automobiles tried to pass at the same time, one, a six cylinder McLaughlin, striking the wheel of the buggy.

AMATEUR SHELL MAKERS.

A remarkable instance of how amateurs can assist in the manufacture of munitions of war is recorded in an English newspaper. "Where there's a will there's a way" is a very old motto. The Rev. W. M. Watkins-Pitchford, Rector of Lamport, Northampton, had a desire to do some real practical work for his country, so he bought a lathe and wrote to all the munition firms he could think of, asking them if they could not give him some small work to do. He received a favorable answer from the great Elswick armament works, who offered him work at finishing shell bases. He put in all the time he could, and talked to his friends about the work he was doing. They, too, were most enthusiastic, and those who had no lathes at once bought them. He told the Elswick firm he could take more shell bases to finish, and more were sent without delay.

The Rector's enthusiasm was fired by this encouragement, so he began circularising people, asking them to help him. Uppingham School and Haileybury College are in this county, and he was fortunate in obtaining the assistance of boys from these well-known public schools. They undertook to finish shell bases in their beautifully appointed workshops. Now at both an enormous number of shell bases are being finished each week. The Uppingham work is so finely finished that Messrs. Armstrong have intimated that the boys are not to spend such trouble on the bases. Twelve lathes are working there, run by forty boys in khaki. A peer, who does not wish his name to be mentioned, has bought lathes and taken them up to Scotland, where his servants are all helping him to finish off these shell bases. The keeper of the lighthouse at the Lizard has written saying he will put in all his spare time on the work if he can only get a lathe. Doctors, solicitors, retired civil servants, and men in all walks of life are offering to help in this work.

All the workers are amateurs, and no money is made out of the work. Postage takes up most of the pay, and the rest is used to advertise the work, so that all may know of it and come in and help. The work, which was commenced in such a small and modest way, has so grown that at present these patriotic amateurs are doing a thousand hours a week. "The joy of it all is," says the Rev. Watkins-Pitchford, "that we who cannot join the Army feel that we are each doing our 'little bit'." Here is pure, unadulterated patriotism! Are there a sufficient number of enthusiasts in Belleville, with enough leisure and enough energy, to take up such a work? They could not be of more real service to the army in any other way. It is munitions, munitions, munitions we require more than anything; and if any amateurs were to take up this work the knowledge that they were being of actual service to the Empire would be a sufficient reward for their self-sacrificing labors.

CURRENT COMMENT

Harry Thaw says he has no intention of writing a book. Maybe the jury was right.—Detroit Free Press.

One year ago today the Government of Great Britain cabled his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught that it did not think Canada's offer of troops would have to be accepted; which shows how much truth there is in the German contention that Britain planned and brought on the war.—Ottawa Journal.

Germany is about to float a new loan. After a while she may decide to let her navy float along too.—Montreal Mail.

The Kaiser plans to make a state entry into Warsaw. But, according to reports the Russians will leave nothing behind to hang flags on.

Funny thing, is it not, that shoplifters never go into a drug store and take something for what is the matter with them!—Vancouver Province.

Turkey's worst ruler is to have his name changed to Abdul the Gentleman in order that Germany's monarch may go thundering down the ages as William the Damned.—Toronto Telegram.

The Seventh Day Adventists say the world will come to an end when the Allies take Constantinople. We know a man who jumped from the roof of his house when the world came to an end some years ago. He broke his leg.—Buffalo Enquirer.

There is much speculation as to the cause of the unusual weather of the past few days. Some are inclined to think the trouble dates back to St. Swithin's day, while others maintain the deluge was caused by the firing in Europe. The next to be blamed will probably be the Kaiser. It certainly looks like some of his work.—Hamilton Herald.

Two Toronto girls have taken vows not to marry until they reach the age of 25, and then only if they find a husband earning at least $2,000 a year. The modesty of their expectations in the matrimonial line is remarkable. Girls young enough to make a vow of that kind are usually looking for a royal prince to come along and carry them off to the altar.

Our path is clear. It is to put in the field every man and every gun, every rifle and every shell and cartridge we possibly can, and to hang on like grim death, killing Germans, and alas! losing bitterly in the task. Whatever the condition of the enemy we cannot have a man or a rifle or a cartridge too many.—Times of India.

The blood of all but moral molluses will pulse the faster at the thought of such deeds. The narrative of the "Eyewitness" with the Canadian troops is evidence that the spirit of the Dominion is worthy of the finest regiments in our regular army. Greater praise than this, for those who know what our regulars have achieved in the war, it would be impossible to bestow.—London Daily Mail.

Whenever you read a letter purporting to come from a Canadian prisoner in Germany telling what fine fellows the Germans are and how disgusted the writer was with the behavior of some of our allied troops, get out a barrelful of salt. This forging of correspondence is as old as the hills with Prussia, and is enjoined by Professor Clausewicz in his book on how to make war—a book which every young Prussian keeps under his pillow.—Victoria Times.

One chastening thought must also be with us. It is shown abundantly that we are richer than Germany, but it also costs us far more to wage war and to subsidise our Allies. Let us be very thankful that our resources stand the test as finely as they do; but let us beware of thinking that for that or that reason any of us would be justified in squandering his part of them upon avoidable expenditure.—London Daily Chronicle.

The public will read with keen interest what Sir John French has to say of the Territorials and of the units of the new armies which he had been able to use up to the date of the despatch. There is high praise for all these forces, and we may think with pride that the first impression which they created on the mind of the Field-Marshal commanding has been justified by the work which they have done since the despatch was written. The material we are sending out will, we believe, constitute one of the finest armies in the world, and will destroy for all time the notion that there is degeneracy in the race.—Westminster Gazette.

This war is in one sense a war of mechanism. Its mechanical appliances wrought to the utmost pitch of destructive ingenuity that modern technique can devise are yet but implements. They are higher tools, but in the hands of the "tool-using animal" they are tools no less than the rudest flint-locks first used in fight by primitive man. It needs no saying that we must move heaven and earth to overhaul the enemy in his continued advantages of production and to secure for ourselves and our allies an equal and ultimately a superior equipment of war. Nevertheless, when everything else has been super-added, the issue will be determined not by the machines but by the character of their wielders.—London Observer.

There is a form of compulsion from which no man can guard himself. In the after years his conscience will compel him to review his decision in the light of events, and he will be bound to answer. No one knows what is before us as a people; all we can do, each of us individually, is, in faith and confidence, to put forth our best efforts. There is no shadow of excuse for hanging back; for eligible man there is a uniform and rifle waiting. Lord Kitchener has given that assurance. The man of military age who, without good excuse, refuses to make the great surrender in such a cause as we are championing will live to discover not only that he has been his worst enemy, but that he has by his abstention assisted the enemy of the nation.—London Daily Telegraph.

"I want you to understand," said young Spender, "that I got my money by hard work." "Why I thought it was left to you by your rich uncle?" "So it was, but I had hard work to get it away from the lawyers."

The Poet's Corner

WHAT WILL YOU LACK, SONNY?

What will you lack, sonny, what will you lack,
When the girls line up the street,
Shouting their love to the lads come back
From the foe they rushed to beat,
Will you send a strangled cheer to the sky
And grin till your cheeks are red?
But what will you lack when your mate goes by.
With a girl who cuts you dead?

Where will you look, sonny, where will you look
When your children yet to be Clamor to learn of the part you took
In the war that kept men free?
Will you say it was naught to you if France
Stood up to her foe or bunked?
But where will you look when they give the glance
That tells you they know you funked?

How will you fare, sonny, how will you fare,
In the far-off winter night,
When you sit by the fire, in an old man's chair
And your neighbors talk of the fight?
Will you slink away, as it were from a blow,
Your old head shamed and bent?
Or say—I was not with the first to go,
But I went, thank God, I went?

Why do they call, sonny, why do they call
For men who are brave and strong?
Is it naught to you if your country fall,
And right is smashed by wrong?
Is it football still and the picture show,
The pub and the betting odds,
When your brothers stand to the tyrant's blow
And England's call is God's?

AVIATOR GIVEN PERMISSION TO FLY OVER MONTREAL CITY

Authorization for Trials is Received from Ottawa by Alien Enemy Bureau

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—Should it happen that in the course of the coming few days there is an aeroplane hovering over the city of Montreal, the citizens need have no cause for worry, for it will be with the sanction of the Militia Department. Col. Sherwood has granted permission to Gustav Pollien to make a flight on a day which has not yet been set.

The finding of Pollien's hangar and machine at Coteau Rouge some days ago caused quite a sensation in the city until it was learned that there was nothing new in the matter so far as the military heads were concerned, for Pollien and Meroz, the joint owners of the machine, had been in communication with the authorities at Ottawa with regard to making trial flights and also offering their machine to the Government.

A letter was yesterday received by the Alien Enemy Bureau from Col. Sherwood, stating that permission to make a flight was granted, but setting no definite date on which the trials are to be made.

Mayor John Smillie, of Montreal South, referring to the discovery, has written stating that the machine and hangar were not located within the limits of Montreal South, as had been stated, but in the parish of St. Antoine de Longueuil, outside of his jurisdiction.

UNMARRIED CLERKS NOT TO BE DROPPED

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—A report that unmarried clerks in the militia and possibly other Government departments were to be discharged to afford positions for returned soldiers was today authoritatively denied by Senator Lougheed, acting Minister of Militia. Such a report has been current for some time and is in fact understood to have been circulated by a certain departmental head among the employees of his branch. As a result there has been considerable apprehension on the part of single men there who expected to be forced out of their positions. Senator Lougheed, however, gave the rumor an authoritative denial. There had been, he stated, representations from certain persons that such action be taken by the Government. But it had not been proposed to do so, the Government not being prepared to interfere with the ordinary course of employment in such a drastic manner. In regard to future appointments, however, preference may be given to returned soldiers. The staff of the Militia Department has been enormously increased since the beginning of the war, and an entirely new department has been created to handle assigned pay, separation allowances, and other such matters. The personnel of these new departments includes scores of men from different branches of industry in Canada, who lost their positions as a result of the war and includes former broker clerks, bookkeepers, engineers, newspaper men, real estate operators, bank clerks and the like.

Daring British Submarine Commanders

Board Turkish Vessel Near Constantinople—Pay for Provisions in Gold

BRUSA, Asiatic Turkey, July 21 by courier to Dedeagatch, Bulgaria; thence by cable.—Daring English submarine commanders, by burrowing beneath the thickly mined waters of the Dardanelles, and eluding the Turkish fleet, have created a reign of terror from the western entrance to the Sea of Marmora to the very gates of Constantinople.

Exactly how many Turkish ships have been sent to the bottom by British submersibles probably is known only to the Turkish Ministry of Marine. The undersea craft have been particularly successful in striking at Turkish transports. En route here from Constantinople, I learned that aboard one of those sunk recently were five hundred wounded Turks who had just been discharged from Constantinople hospitals and were returning to the Gallipoli front. Only 150 were saved. The news was suppressed by the Turkish Government, but the disaster occurred in full view of another transport laden with wounded soldiers who made the facts known.

Brusa, inland from the port of Mudania, is the Asia Minor city to which it was proposed to move the Turkish capital in case Constantinople was threatened. I came here first on the Friday boat of the three-times-a-week service from Constantinople, across the Sea of Marmora. A few days previous the boat from Brusa to Constantinople had actually been stopped and boarded by officers from a British submarine within a few miles of Islam's capital. The British officers were looking for Turkish soldiers. They found none, but took off what food supplies were aboard, paying for them in English gold, and saluting courteously as they left the ship.

Boats Carry Lifeboats Swung

Because of the fear inspired by this visit our boat left the Bosphorus with the lifeboats swung out and with hundreds of life preservers hanging over the rail ready for instant use. Instead of heading directly across the Sea of Marmora, the usual course, we crept along the coast for the entire distance, never getting more than 200 or 300 yards from shore.

Record Demand For Fair Space

All Booths at Toronto Fair Were Spoken for Many Days Ago

An unprecedented demand for space at the Canadian National Exhibition marks the thirty-seventh year of the Fair at Toronto. Days ago the entire allotment of 800 exhibits in the Manufacturers' Building was taken up, while the Industrial Building has been crowded equally as long. The agricultural exhibits are more numerous than for years past, and all other departments are equally as prosperous from an exhibit standpoint.

One of the notable features is the excessive demand for space in the Transportation Building, now given over entirely to the automobile men. The sign over the building says the site is devoted to transportation by land and sea. As a matter of fact, every other but auto exhibits has been crowded out, and the demand from the agricultural districts for motor cars is largely to blame for the active inquiry for space in this building.

There has been a larger sale of automobiles thoughout Canada this year than ever before, and the demand from the country is the answer. There is not an auto firm in Canada that has not been behind in its orders at some time this season.

Col. Guthrie, Blind Can See Once More

Gallant Commander of the Tenth Canadians Blown From Trench

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 5.—The first story from Lieut.-Col. Percy Guthrie, M.P.P., commander of the 10th Battalion, since he was wounded in the battle of Festubert, has been received from the hospital at La Touquet, France. A "coal box" burst in front of him; he was thrown into the air and landed in the hole created by the shell. He hobbled 150 yards and fell exhausted, and to all appearances was dead. He was carried on a stretcher to one of the dressing stations and one of the bearers lost a leg in trying to rescue him.

The letter tells of his treatment in the hospital and the recovery of his eyesight, which at one time was thought to have been lost. Col. Guthrie writes:

"I am at last able to wield the pen. The strength seemed to come back to my arm and I am sitting up in bed just after finishing my supper and it is the first day I have not had to drop back among pillows after getting through Three days ago ago I was up in one of those wheeled chairs but I got so dizzy I had soon to get back to bed. I think I am coming along now, but as the danger zone is passed I don't mind telling you I am a wreck. I don't think I weigh more than 130 pounds. I will quit writing now as I am getting dizzy."

Two Days Later

The letter was continued on July 14th, two days later, and is as follows:

"Here I am again with a few lines. I was up today in my wheeled chair for a couple of hours and was out to the sitting room where all the cripples gather as soon as they are able. After this they intend having me sit up in the forenoon as well as the afternoon. In this way I shall gather strength and then try the crutches. As soon a I am able to be on the crutches I will be sent across to England and there a Board of Officers will sit on me to decide if I am any further use to His Majesty. I am sure they will decide that I will be able to fight again as I could, even with a stiff foot, get along with a battalion and help to do up a few more Huns. The medical men tell me it will take two and perhaps three months before I can walk with a cane. The board may decide to send me to Canada during the time I am getting well.

Made Three Attacks

"All my wounds are healed up and I am as sound as a dollar. I would like to tell you all about our four days' and nights' fighting at Festubert. How the dear old Tenth, composed of men from the Prairies and a few New Brunswickers, who joined us from the 12th charged the Germans in the darkness. We made three attacks, taking 100 yards of trenches at one time, 225 yards another morning early and 425 yards another night. It was a great honor, the greatest of my life to lead those men as we charged over their trenches despite their fire and bombs and put them to the bayonet. The cheers of my dear boys shall ever ring in my ears, but I hope to forget the death cries of the enemy which often wake me in the night. I contend there are no fighters just like our boys. On the word command they fling themselves forward, a wall of mad humanity, and they have not yet been successfully resisted in a charge. I will tell you again about it all and the many brave things I saw our boys do that are almost unbelievable and I might say incomparable.

"I will write you a full account later of how I got blown up by the "coal box.' A sixty-pound high explosive lit at my feet and up I went in the air. When I came down I lit in the hole the explosion made and gathered myself together. After I came to and hobbled about 150 yards towards a dressing station. Then from the loss of blood I fell in the grass along a wood. I fell asleep and was aroused by the stretcher bearers. One lost a leg from a shell that burst while they were putting me on a stretcher, so two men carried me in. It is a long story to tell you how the doctor, a London Regiment officer, dressed my wounds, and how I passed from hospital to hospital until I landed at No. 2 Stationary Hospital. They have used me fine and taken so much trouble with me. I can never repay Col. Shillington and Sister Graham for their work with my wounds, or Capt. Pentecost for bringing back the sight of my eyes, which I nearly lost at Ypres. I kept this from you as the doctors at that time told me I should gradually grow blind and I was, I know getting worse, until I came here. As I feel myself getting a little weak I shall say good night."

SAW BLAZING GASES USED

Many Died of Suffocation Caused From Intense Heat

North of France, August 5.—An officer who was in the fighting line when the Germans attacked the British with blazing gases has given his impressions of this novel engine of war.

"I don't think the use of these flames is any less formidable than aspyxiating gases. Their effect at short range is much worse, but it is easier to find a shelter from them. Flames carry only a relatively short distance and cannot reach you a long way off, as is often the way with poison gases. The flame is yellow, with a blue nucleus, and is directed through a powerful air jet. It springs from the ground level and expands into a roaring wave of fire. Indeed, the flame is very like that of the common Burnsen burner of the Laboratory, only it is more yellow. The pressure of the air and other gas that is used to force the inflammable liquid through the jet must be enormous in view of the volume and fury of the flames.

"Many of the victims died simply from suffocation caused by the intense heat that rolled forward in front of these flames which did not touch them. The unity and courage shown by our men in face of this terrible attack were beyond praise."

Long Motor Trip To Serve Empire

Determined Loyal Canadians Started on Six Thousand Mile Journey in June

NEW YORK, Aug. 5—The war fever has so taken hold of Canada that Robert Frank, a real estate clerk, and George Morley, a locomotive engineer, could stand it no longer. They both lived in Saskatoon.

Wishing to avoid railroad expenses they fitted up their motor cycle with a side car, and in the early part of June started on the 6,000 mile trip to Liverpool via New York. The two Canadians, motor cycle and all, will sail to-morrow on the Adriatic for England to enlist. Frank and Morley left Saskatoon on June 9th, and covered the 2,960 miles to New York in about 30 days actual running time.

After the revolution the French started a new calendar, beginning with the year 1.

While some statesmen are all to the good from the viewpoint of their party most of the legislative brand seem to be political misfits.

The Vampire

In Romance She Is Beautiful, In Real Life Unattractive to All Except Her Victims.

By EILEEN BRENNAN

There have been many versions of the woman who has a passion for enthralling men, from the ordinary flirt to the vampire. The ordinary flirt is supposed to have a conscience. The vampire lures men to their ruin and if they have families are as ready to wreck wife and children as the man himself.

The vampire is not a beauty with soft, languishing eyes. She has a stony face. She conquers rather by her will power than by fascination, though she calls to her assistance the senses whenever she finds it necessary. I have never seen but one woman in real life who deserved the name of vampire. While staying at a summer hotel I heard of a man among the guests who was enthralled by a woman and taken completely away from his family. I was told that I might see the couple any evening after dinner when the guests walked on the piazza, promenading with the others. I expected to see a radiant beauty in the woman, with seductive manners. I was astonished at looking upon the stoniest face I have ever seen and utterly devoid of beauty. The man was good looking, though there was no strength in his features. But the will may grow stronger or weaken like the muscles, which are developed by exercise or become flabby by disuse. I afterward learned the story of this man.

Edward Grant was prominent in college not only as an all round available man, but as a scholar. He was president of his class and graduated with honors. He became attached to Marjorie Fleetwood, the daughter of one of the professors of the university. They were married, and a boy baby was born to them.

The couple had been married fourteen years when Edward Grant was called from his home in the east to San Francisco on a matter of business. It was his first separation from his family except for a few days at a time, and he no more wished to go than his wife wished to have him go. He was debating with her whether, after all, he had not better give up the trip when their son, Harry, thirteen years old, came into the room where they were and heard his father tell his mother that he had promised his partner to make the journey.

"Papa," said Harry, "if you have promised don't you think you ought to go?"

This decided the father, who took his son into his arms and hugged and kissed him with pride. Then, after a last embrace of his wife, he tore himself away.

On the same train and having a chair in the same parlor car with Grant sat a woman about his own age traveling alone. She was reading a novel, while Grant was looking out through the window, seeing nothing of the passing view, for his vision was upon a mental picture of the wife and son from whom he had just parted, and he was wondering how he could endure that separation during the period fixed for his absence.

The woman in the next chair was constantly glancing aside from her book at the fine looking man who was so wrapped in his thoughts that he was unconscious of her presence. While she was by no means beautiful, she was dressed faultlessly, and there was that suspicion of perfume about her which is seductive in a woman who is an adept in the art of its use.

The lady dropped a glove. Grant did not see it. She leaned forward to pick it up, brushing against him. He turned and looked into a pair of eyes fixed upon his. From him the eyes fell to the glove. Grant bent and picked it up. The lady made a move to recover it again, and, their heads coming very near together, they turned their faces toward each other, and Grant saw that same pair of eyes fixed upon his and in close proximity. Then he reached for the glove and handed it to her. She thanked him and resumed her novel. Grant turned again to look out through the window.

But now those eyes, in which there was a lure, came between him and the vision of his wife and son. The faint odor that hung about the woman was wafted toward him whenever any one passed through the car. No word was spoken by either, but now and again their eyes met, and every time Grant felt more strongly the lure that was in those of the woman. Gradually a feeling came over him that sitting beside this woman hour after hour without a word passing between them was becoming irksome. Was it not a want of compliment to his fellow passenger that he should refrain from addressing her? Surely it would be immodest in her to speak to him without a word from him.

He made a trivial remark. The lady received it not unkindly, but replied briefly. The ice thus broken, they soon fell to conversing. The woman was a good listener, and Grant was a fluent talker. She listened, but did not absorb what he said. This he knew, for there was between them a subtle undercurrent that told him his companion was interested in him rather than in what he said. While he was speaking she kept her eyes fixed intently upon his, and in them was always that lure.

* * * * * * *

When Edward Grant returned from his journey he was a changed man. He could not return the embrace of his wife and son as when he had left them. That something was on his mind was plain to Mrs. Grant, but she could not tell what it was. On the evening of his return after dinner he lit a cigar, and the comfort of being at home seemed to have dispelled what had come between him and it when there was a ring at the telephone. He looked disquieted. Mrs. Grant arose to go to the instrument, but he motioned her to be seated and went himself.

When he returned to her he said that he was sorry not to be able to pass the first night of his return at home, but that a matter connected with the business upon which he had gone to the west called him out. His wife knew that he was deceiving her, but pretended to believe him. In a few minutes after leaving his home he was with the woman who had been his travelling companion.

It was not long before Mrs. Grant learned that her husband had fallen into the hands of a vampire. Spring was coming on, and rooms were engaged for the Grant family for July and August at the hotel where they usually spent the summer. Grant made no objection to going there, and his wife hoped that if she could get him where she could keep him continually under her surveillance she might break the spell that held him. Alas, when she reached the summer resort among the guests at the hotel where the Grant family stopped was a woman who, it soon became evident, was the cause of her husband's trouble.

It was there that I first heard of this case and saw Grant and the vampire promenading the piazza of the hotel after dinner. What became of him and the woman at other times I did not know, for I seldom saw either of them at any other hour than evening. Mrs. Grant I did not see at all. I was told that she kept her room, not caring to face those who were witnesses of the shame that had been put upon her. But I saw Harry Grant frequently with other boys of his age playing tennis and bathing. He was a fine, manly boy, and it seemed to me that he was what his father had been at his age.

When the end of the season came Mrs. Grant and Harry returned to the city together, while his father bowled along the turnpike in an automobile with the vampire. Every one sympathized with the wife, but no one was in a position to do anything for her. Every one despised the man. Yet not every one, for I had a different view concerning the matter. There are various influences that will undermine a man's will power, and once it is undermined it is very difficult for him to recover it. Nevertheless nothing is impossible.

The trouble in the Grant family went on till Harry Grant had passed fifteen years of age. He had understood the family trouble from the first and the cause of it. He was now nearly full grown, and the skeleton in the family closet and his love for his parents had made a man of him. He dissuaded his mother from applying for a divorce until he had made an effort to save his father from the vampire.

One day he had a talk with his father, who confided to his son that the only way he could throw off the thrall of the vampire was to escape from her long enough to regain his will power, but he was not able to make an attempt to escape. Soon after this Harry one day asked his father to take a ride with him in his car. Grant consented, and Harry took the wheel, with his father beside him. They had scarcely left the city when the car stopped and two strong men entered and took the back seat. Grant looked suspicious and asked what it meant. Then Harry told him that he was his prisoner and would remain so until he was restored to his family. Realizing that the two men in the rear seat had been hired to overpower him in case he resisted, Grant saw the futility of trying to escape. Harry took him to a house he had prepared for him, where no one would be able to reach him, and kept him there.

At the end of a month Grant begged for his wife to come to him, and Harry persuaded her to do so. The family continued to live in their secret abode, no one dreading being discovered more than the husband and father. He was like a convalescent who has suffered from delirium, but who now every day feels his strength returning to him.

The vampire meanwhile found another victim. Nevertheless she made every effort to find Grant, rather from the deviltry there was in her and a repugnance to having him spirited away from her than any desire to continue in possession of him. Three months elapsed before she succeeding in finding his retreat. Then she appeared, intending to take him away by means of the mental spell she exercised over him.

When she arrived Grant had fully recovered. His wife and Harry, in turn, begged him to permit them to meet her and send her away. He refused, assuring them that it was not necessary. Receiving her himself, he confronted her with a look of horror that would have made another woman wince.

"Evil woman," he said, "leave these premises! Your power has gone. The rest of my life shall be devoted to undoing what you have made me do."

The vampire gave him the old look by which she had never failed to bring him back to her when he rebelled, but it was powerless, and no one knew it better than herself. Turning, she entered the conveyance in which she had come, and neither Edward Grant nor his wife or son ever saw her again.

THREE REVOLUTIONS RAGING IN PORTUGAL

LISBON, July 30., via Paris, Aug. 5—Sensational and alarming reports are current in the capital of no less than three separate revolutions in Portugal. Riots and assaults are of daily occurrence. Political feeling has completely disorganized the army and clashes between the Royal and the Republican supports and other factions are frequent.

Yesterday a quartermaster from the engineers' barracks shot and killed three sergeants of his regiment and then committed suicide. The sergeants were members of a secret society known as the "White Ants," and had denounced the quartermaster as belonging to the Republican faction, which is accused of conspiring against the present Government.

HEARING 3,400 MILES

You take a pair of receivers from the back of the seat in front of you in a little theatre in telephone exhibit at the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco and put them to your ears, the lecturer presses a button, and New York is switched to the wire. A boy in the New York office of the telephone company reads the headlines from the afternoon papers, describes the weather conditions at the moment, and then switches on a phonograph and you hear "canned music" by telephone over a wire, 3,400 miles long. It is a thrilling sensation, especially to anyone who has just traveled from the Atlantic coast, to be carried back in an instant to a place from which he has traveled five days and nights by train to San Francisco—World's Work.

SAW BLAZING GASES USED

Many Died of Suffocation Caused From Intense Heat

North of France, August 5.—An officer who was in the fighting line when the Germans attacked the British with blazing gases has given his impressions of this novel engine of war.

"I don't think the use of these flames is any less formidable than aspyxiating gases. Their effect at short range is much worse, but it is easier to find a shelter from them. Flames carry only a relatively short distance and cannot reach you a long way off, as is often the way with poison gases. The flame is yellow, with a blue nucleus, and is directed through a powerful air jet. It springs from the ground level and expands into a roaring wave of fire. Indeed, the flame is very like that of the common Burnsen burner of the Laboratory, only it is more yellow. The pressure of the air and other gas that is used to force the inflammable liquid through the jet must be enormous in view of the volume and fury of the flames.

"Many of the victims died simply from suffocation caused by the intense heat that rolled forward in front of these flames which did not touch them. The unity and courage shown by our men in face of this terrible attack were beyond praise."

Long Motor Trip To Serve Empire

Determined Loyal Canadians Started on Six Thousand Mile Journey in June

NEW YORK, Aug. 5—The war fever has so taken hold of Canada that Robert Frank, a real estate clerk, and George Morley, a locomotive engineer, could stand it no longer. They both lived in Saskatoon.

Wishing to avoid railroad expenses they fitted up their motor cycle with a side car, and in the early part of June started on the 6,000 mile trip to Liverpool via New York. The two Canadians, motor cycle and all, will sail to-morrow on the Adriatic for England to enlist. Frank and Morley left Saskatoon on June 9th, and covered the 2,960 miles to New York in about 30 days actual running time.

After the revolution the French started a new calendar, beginning with the year 1.

While some statesmen are all to the good from the viewpoint of their party most of the legislative brand seem to be political misfits.

The Vampire

In Romance She Is Beautiful, In Real Life Unattractive to All Except Her Victims.

By EILEEN BRENNAN

There have been many versions of the woman who has a passion for enthralling men, from the ordinary flirt to the vampire. The ordinary flirt is supposed to have a conscience. The vampire lures men to their ruin and if they have families are as ready to wreck wife and children as the man himself.

The vampire is not a beauty with soft, languishing eyes. She has a stony face. She conquers rather by her will power than by fascination, though she calls to her assistance the senses whenever she finds it necessary. I have never seen but one woman in real life who deserved the name of vampire. While staying at a summer hotel I heard of a man among the guests who was enthralled by a woman and taken completely away from his family. I was told that I might see the couple any evening after dinner when the guests walked on the piazza, promenading with the others. I expected to see a radiant beauty in the woman, with seductive manners. I was astonished at looking upon the stoniest face I have ever seen and utterly devoid of beauty. The man was good looking, though there was no strength in his features. But the will may grow stronger or weaken like the muscles, which are developed by exercise or become flabby by disuse. I afterward learned the story of this man.

Edward Grant was prominent in college not only as an all round available man, but as a scholar. He was president of his class and graduated with honors. He became attached to Marjorie Fleetwood, the daughter of one of the professors of the university. They were married, and a boy baby was born to them.

The couple had been married fourteen years when Edward Grant was called from his home in the east to San Francisco on a matter of business. It was his first separation from his family except for a few days at a time, and he no more wished to go than his wife wished to have him go. He was debating with her whether, after all, he had not better give up the trip when their son, Harry, thirteen years old, came into the room where they were and heard his father tell his mother that he had promised his partner to make the journey.

"Papa," said Harry. "if you have promised don't you think you ought to go?"

This decided the father, who took his son into his arms and hugged and kissed him with pride. Then, after a last embrace of his wife, he tore himself away.

On the same train and having a chair in the same parlor car with Grant sat a woman about his own age traveling alone. She was reading a novel, while Grant was looking out through the window, seeing nothing of the passing view, for his vision was upon a mental picture of the wife and son from whom he had just parted, and he was wondering how he could endure that separation during the period fixed for his absence.

The woman in the next chair was constantly glancing aside from her book at the fine looking man who was so wrapped in his thoughts that he was unconscious of her presence. While she was by no means beautiful, she was dressed faultlessly, and there was that suspicion of perfume about her which is seductive in a woman who is an adept in the art of its use.

The lady dropped a glove. Grant did not see it. She leaned forward to pick it up, brushing against him. He turned and looked into a pair of eyes fixed upon his. From him the eyes fell to the glove. Grant bent and picked it up. The lady made a move to recover it again, and, their heads coming very near together, they turned their faces toward each other, and Grant saw that same pair of eyes fixed upon his and in close proximity. Then he reached for the glove and handed it to her. She thanked him and resumed her novel. Grant turned again to look out through the window.

But now those eyes, in which there was a lure, came between him and the vision of his wife and son. The faint odor that hung about the woman was wafted toward him whenever any one passed through the car. No word was spoken by either, but now and again their eyes met, and every time Grant felt more strongly the lure that was in those of the woman. Gradually a feeling came over him that sitting beside this woman hour after hour without a word passing between them was becoming irksome. Was it not a want of compliment to his fellow passenger that he should refrain from addressing her? Surely it would be immodest in her to speak to him without a word from him.

He made a trivial remark. The lady received it not unkindly, but replied briefly. The ice thus broken, they soon fell to conversing. The woman was a good listener, and Grant was a fluent talker. She listened, but did not absorb what he said. This he knew, for there was between them a subtle undercurrent that told him his companion was interested in him rather than in what he said. While he was speaking she kept her eyes fixed intently upon his, and in them was always that lure.

• • • • • • •

When Edward Grant returned from his journey he was a changed man. He could not return the embrace of his wife and son as when he had left them. That something was on his mind was plain to Mrs. Grant, but she could not tell what it was. On the evening of his return after dinner he lit a cigar, and the comfort of being at home seemed to have dispelled what had come between him and it when there was a ring at the telephone. He looked disquieted. Mrs. Grant arose to go to the instrument, but he motioned her to be seated and went himself.

When he returned to her he said that he was sorry not to be able to pass the first night of his return at home, but that a matter connected with the business upon which he had gone to the west called him out. His wife knew that he was deceiving her, but pretended to believe him. In a few minutes after leaving his home he was with the woman who had been his traveling companion.

It was not long before Mrs. Grant learned that her husband had fallen into the hands of a vampire. Spring was coming on, and rooms were engaged for the Grant family for July and August at the hotel where they usually spent the summer. Grant made no objection to going there, and his wife hoped that if she could get him where she could keep him continually under her surveillance she might break the spell that held him. Alas, when she reached the summer resort among the guests at the hotel where the Grant family stopped was a woman who, it soon became evident, was the cause of her husband's trouble.

It was there that I first heard of this case and saw Grant and the vampire promenading the piazza of the hotel after dinner. What became of him and the woman at other times I did not know, for I seldom saw either of them at any other hour than evening. Mrs. Grant I did not see at all. I was told that she kept her room, not caring to face those who were witnesses of the shame that had been put upon her. But I saw Harry Grant frequently with other boys of his age playing tennis and bathing. He was a fine, manly boy, and it seemed to me that he was what his father had been at his age.

When the end of the season came Mrs. Grant and Harry returned to the city together, while his father bowled along the turnpike in an automobile with the vampire. Every one sympathized with the wife, but no one was in a position to do anything for her. Every one despised the man. Yet not every one, for I had a different view concerning the matter. There are various influences that will undermine a man's will power, and once it is undermined it is very difficult for him to recover it. Nevertheless nothing is impossible.

The trouble in the Grant family went on till Harry Grant had passed fifteen years of age. He had understood the family trouble from the first and the cause of it. He was now nearly full grown, and the skeleton in the family closet and his love for his parents had made a man of him. He dissuaded his mother from applying for a divorce until he had made an effort to save his father from the vampire.

One day he had a talk with his father, who confided to his son that the only way he could throw off the thrall of the vampire was to escape from her long enough to regain his will power, but he was not able to make an attempt to escape. Soon after this Harry one day asked his father to take a ride with him in his car. Grant consented, and Harry took the wheel, with his father beside him. They had scarcely left the city when the car stopped and two strong men entered and took the back seat. Grant looked suspicious and asked what it meant. Then Harry told him that he was his prisoner and would remain so until he was restored to his family. Realizing that the two men in the rear seat had been hired to overpower him in case he resisted, Grant saw the futility of trying to escape. Harry took him to a house he had prepared for him, where no one would be able to reach him, and kept him there.

At the end of a month Grant begged for his wife to come to him, and Harry persuaded her to do so. The family continued to live in their secret abode, no one dreading being discovered more than the husband and father. He was like a convalescent who has suffered from delirium, but who now every day feels his strength returning to him.

The vampire meanwhile found another victim. Nevertheless she made every effort to find Grant, rather from the deviltry there was in her and a repugnance to having him spirited away from her than any desire to continue in possession of him. Three months elapsed before she succeeding in finding his retreat. Then she appeared, intending to take him away by means of the mental spell she exercised over him.

When she arrived Grant had fully recovered. His wife and Harry, in turn, begged him to permit them to meet her and send her away. He refused, assuring them that it was not necessary. Receiving her himself, he confronted her with a look of horror that would have made another woman wince.

"Evil woman," he said, "leave these premises! Your power has gone. The rest of my life shall be devoted to undoing what you have made me do."

The vampire gave him the old look by which she had never failed to bring him back to her when he rebelled, but it was powerless, and no one knew it better than herself. Turning, she entered the conveyance in which she had come, and neither Edward Grant nor his wife or son ever saw her again.

THREE REVOLUTIONS RAGING IN PORTUGAL

LISBON, July 30., via Paris, Aug. 5—Sensational and alarming reports are current in the capital of no less than three separate revolutions in Portugal. Riots and assaults are of daily occurrence. Political feeling has completely disorganized the army and clashes between the Royal and the Republican supports and other factions are frequent.

Yesterday a quartermaster from the engineers' barracks shot and killed three sergeants of his regiment and then committed suicide. The sergeants were members of a secret society known as the "White Ants," and had denounced the quartermaster as belonging to the Republican faction, which is accused of conspiring against the present Government.

HEARING 3,400 MILES

You take a pair of receivers from the back of the seat in front of you in a little theatre in telephone exhibit at the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco and put them to your ears, the lecturer presses a button, and New York is switched to the wire. A boy in the New York office of the telephone company reads the headlines from the afternoon papers, describes the weather conditions at the moment, and then switches on a phonograph and you hear "canned music" by telephone over a wire, 3,400 miles long. It is a thrilling sensation, especially to anyone who has just traveled from the Atlantic coast, to be carried back in an instant to a place from which he has traveled five days and nights by train to San Francisco—World's Work.

CHAPTER XXII

"Trimmings, Not Squails."

The longest week must have an end; and so at last the eventful Monday morning arrived—"Black Monday," as Dulce called it, and then sighed as she looked out on the sunshine and the waving trees, and thought how delicious a long walk or a game of tennis would be, instead of this stitch, stitch, stitching all day. But Dulce was an unselfish little soul, and kept all these thoughts to herself, and dressed herself quickly; for she had overslept herself, and Phillis had long been downstairs.

Nan was locking up the tea-caddy as she entered the parlor, and Phillis was standing by the table, drawing on her gloves, and her lips were twitching a little—a way they had when Phillis was nervous.

Nan went up and kissed her, and gave her an encouraging pat.

"This is for luck, my dear; and mind you make the best of poor Miss Milner's dumpy, roundabout little figure. There I have put the body-lining, and the measuring-tape, and a paper of pins in this little black bag; and I have not forgotten the scissors—oh, dear, no! I have not forgotten the scissors," went on Nan, with such surprising cheerfulness that Phillis saw through it, and was down on her in a moment.

"No, Nan; there! I declare I will not be such a goose. I am not nervous—not one bit; it is pure fun, that is what it is. Dulce, what a naughty child you are to versleep yourself this morning, and I had not the heart to wake you, you looked so like a baby; and we never wake babies because they are sure to squall!"

"Oh Phil, are you going to Miss Milner's? I would have walked with you if I had had my breakfast; but I am so hungry."

"I could not possibly wait," returned Phillis; "punctuality is one of the first duties of—hem!—dressmakers; all orders executed promptly, and promises performed with undeviating regularity; those are my maxims. Eat a good breakfast, and then see if mammy wants any help, for Nan must be ready for me at the work-table, for she is our head cutter-out." And then Phillis nodded briskly, and walked away.

By a singular chance Mr. Drummond was watering his ferns in the front court as Phillis passed and in spite of her reluctance, for somehow he was the last person she wanted to encounter that day, she was obliged to wish him good-morning.

"Good-morning! Yes, indeed, it is a glorious morning," observed Arie, brightly. "And may I ask where you are going so early?"

"Only to the Library," returned Phillis, laconically; but the color mounted to her forehead. "We begin business to-day."

And then Archie took up his watering-pot and refained from any more questions. It was absurd, perhaps, but at the moment he had forgotten, and the remembrance was not pleasing.

Phillis felt quite brave after this, and walked into the Library as though the place belonged to her. When it came to details, Miss Milner was far more nervous than she.

She would keep apologizing to Phillis for making her stand so long, and she wanted to hold the pins and to pick up the scissors that Pihills had dropped; and when the young dressmaker consulted her about the trimmings, she was far too humble to intrude her opinions.

"Anything you think best, Miss Challoner, for you have such beautiful taste as never was seen; and I am sure the way you have fitted that body-lining is just wonderful, and would be a lesson to Miss Slasher for life. No, don't put the pins in your mouth, there's a dear."

For, in her intense zeal, Phillis had thought herself bound to follow the manner of Mrs. Sloper, the village factotum, and she always did so, though Nan afterwards assured her that it was not necessary, and that in this particular they might be allowed to deviate from example.

But she was quite proud of herself when she had finished, for the material seemed to mould under her fingers in the most marvellous way, and she knew the fit would be perfect. She wanted to rush off at once and set to work with Nan; but Miss Milner would not let her off so easily. There was orange wine and seed-cake of her own making in the back parlor, and she had just one question—a very little question—to ask. And here Miss Milner coughed a little behind her hand to gain time and recover her courage.

"The little papers were about the shop, and Mrs. Trimmings saw one, and—and——" Here Phillis came promptly to her relief.

"And Mrs. Trimmings wants to order a dress, does she?" And Phillis bravely kept down the sudden sinking of heart at the news.

Mrs. Trimmings was the butcher's wife,—the sister of that very Mrs. Squails to whom Dulce made mention,—well known to be the dressiest woman in Hadleigh, who was much given to imitate her betters. The newest fashions, the best materials, were always to be found on Mrs. Trimming's portly figure.

"What could I do?" observed Miss Milner, apologetically; "the papers were about the shop, and what does the woman do but take one up? 'I wonder what sort of dressmakers these are?' she said, careless-like; 'there is my new blue silk that Andrew brought himself from London and paid five-and-sixpence a yard for in St. Paul's Churchyard, and I dare not let Miss Slasher have it, for she made such a mess of that French emrino. She had to let it out at every seam before I could get into it, and it is so tight for me now that I shall be obliged to cut it up for Mary Arne. I wonder if I dare try these new people?'"

"And what did you say, Miss Milner?"

"What could I do then, my dear young lady, but speak up and say the best I could for you? for though Mrs. Trimmings is not high—not one of the gentry, I mean—and has a rough tongue sooometimes, still she knows what good stuff and good cutting-out means, and a word from her might do you a power of good among the townsfolks, for her gowns are always after the best patterns."

'All right!" returned Pihllis, cheerfully; "one must creep before one runs, and, until the gentry employ us, we ought too think ourselves fortunate to work for the townpeople. I am not a bit above making a dress for Mrs. Trimmings, though I would rather make one for you, Miss Milner; because you have been so kind to us."

"There, now, didn't I say there never were such young ladies!" exclaimed Miss Milner, quite affected at this. "Well, if you are sure you do not mind, Miss Challoner dear, will you please go to Mrs. Trimming's this morning? for though I told her my dress was to be finished first, still Trimming's isn't a stone's-throw from here; and you may as well settle a thing when you are about it."

"And I will take the silk, Miss Milner, if you will kindly let me have a nice piece of brown paper."

"Indeed and you will do no such thing, Miss Challoner; and there is Joseph going down with the papers to Mr. Drummond's and will leave it at the Friary as he passes."

"Oh, thank you," observed Phillis, gratefully. "Then I will pencil a word to my sister, to let her know why I am detained. And she scrawlel a line to Nan:

"Trimmings, not Squails: here beginneth the first chapter. Expect me when you see me, and do nothing until I come."

There was no side-door at Trimming's, and Mrs. Trimings was at the desk, jotting down legs of mutton, ad entries of gravy-beef and suet, with a rapidity that would have tried the brain of any other woman than a butcher's wife.

When Phillis approached, she looked up at her suavely, expecting custom.

"Just half a moment, ma'am," she said, civily. "Yes, Joe, wing-rib and half of suet to Mrs. Penfold, and a loin of lamb and sweet-bread for No. 12, Albert Terrace. Now ma'am, what can I do for you?"

July 2 was the 115th anniversary of the passing of the Act of Union with Ireland.

A recent appointment of interest in insurance circles is that of Mr. A. D. "WHO COMES HERE?"

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Halt! Who comes here?"

"Friends, with the countersign."

"Advance one and give the countersign."

It was the relief going the rounds to change the pickets, and I was dropped out at post No. 7. We had fought Lee all day long on the strangest battlefield of the whole war—in the Wilderness. From right to left flank, from front to rear, we were hemmed in by forest and thicket. There were swamps in which lizards and serpents lurked, thickets in which the coy whippoorwill built its nest, dense spots of forest which seemed never to have echoed the ring of the woodman's ax.

Post No. 7 was under a large tree on the edge of a thicket. It was a lonely place, well away from the camps, the dead and the dying, but I was glad to be alone. I had been nearly an hour on the post without anything happening to alarm me, when I heard a person moving in the thicket across the open strip.

Rustle, rustle! Step, step! It was a cautious movement. Whoever it was hoped to reach me without discovery, but there were dead leaves underfoot, and the thicket was dense. A hare could not have moved without betraying its presence.

"Who comes here?"

There is silence for fifteen seconds, and then a woman's voice answers:

"I can't find the place! It's so dark I can't find the place!"

Aye, it was a woman's voice, and it had a sob in it, too—a woman there in the darkness between the hostile lines with powder smoke still in the air, with stray bullets darting through the thickets with a whiz as of some great insect stirred to anger.

"Who comes here?"

"I wish it wasn't so dark! I am so tired!"

And then she comes across the open strip toward me, making no stop, never hesitating, walking straight up to me, as if she could see as well by night as in the sunshine of day.

"I can't find the place!" she sobbed as she came to a stop within arm's length.

"Good God, woman, what are you doing here?" I gasped, almost terrified at her presence.

"See! See!" she replied, holding a bundle out toward me. "One time I saw a beautiful spot in the woods and said to myself that if he died I would bury him there, but I can't find it—I can't find it!"

"What is it, woman? What have you got there?"

"See! See! Don't be afraid. He's dead. He can't speak or move. Take him!"

She put a bundle into my arms, and I cried out and let my musket fall. It was the body of a baby about a year and a half old. Dead? Yes—dead from a cruel bullet which had pierced its little body and left a great wound, which looked horrible to me in the dim light; dead and cold and bathed in its own blood—dead for hours! And when I reached out and touched the shawl or wrap worn by the mother my fingers burned at the feel of blood!

"Was it your baby? Did you live in the cabin beyond the thicket?" I asked, still holding the little corpse.

"He was so happy!" she said as she patted the little bare head with a motherly hand. "And I was so happy too! He won't ever laugh and crow again, will he? I've got to find that beautiful place and bury him, haven't I? And you'll help me? Yes; I know you will, for you don't swear and curse at me."

She had lost her mind. Think of it—an insane mother wandering over a bloody battlefield with her dead child in her arms! She had but one idea—to bury it in a dell which she had once visited and remarked its beauty, a dell in which Federal and Confederate were doubtless then burying their own dead.

I knew not what to do. I could not leave my post, and I did not want her to go wandering farther. I was trying to soothe and quiet the woman when she suddenly cried out:

"Ah, it's not so dark now, and I can find the place! I'll go on ahead and dig the grave, and you follow on with the baby. Poor baby! He won't know that he is buried, will he? I can find the place, and you"—

"Come back! Come back!" I called to her as she fled away in the darkness, but she was 200 feet away as she answered me:

"I'll find the place! Poor, poor baby!"

And when the relief came I told the story and pointed to the bundle resting on the ground beside me.

"God pity her!" whispered the sergeant as he lifted his cap.

"God pity her!" echoed all the others as they stood uncovered around the poor little corpse.

Time meant human lives that night. Grant was moving by the flank. Lee was moving by the flank to match him. The morrow was to witness more slaughter—make thousands of other widows and orphans.

"Dig here!" said the sergeant, and with our bayonets we scooped out a shallow grave in scarcely more than a minute's time.

"Carefully now! Poor little thing! Now fill in. That will do. God knows where it lies! Fall in!—Forward, march!"

And yet men write of the glory of war!

Good luck is but another name for common sense.

Dettingen was the last battle in which an English King commanded in person.

SPECIAL WAR TAXES MORE THAN EXPECTED

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—The special war taxes are more than meeting the expectations of Hon. W. T. White, Finance Minister. Receipts to date on account of the special war taxes paid in by chartered banks, loans and trust companies, insurance companies and railways amount to a total of $823,211.40. Of this amount chartered banks have contributed $248,500.78 for the quarter ended March 31 and $248,254.29 for the quarter ended June 30. Mr. White estimated the receipts for the year at a million. Railways have contributed $145,000 for the quarter ended June 30. The railway taxes are from special taxes on railway and sleeping car tickets. The returns from the loan insurance and trust companies, are not complete, as some companies have not made their returns. Last month saw an increase in the customs revenue of $431,000. From now on it is expected there will be a big increase in the returns over last year.

Arrested for Killing a Cow

For some time farmers in the north country in the township of Elsevir and adjoining sections have been missing cattle. Some of them concluded they would have to bring in a detective to see if the guilty parties could be caught.

Ex-Reeve R. J. Campbell missed a fine thoroughbred registered Shorthorn heifer Wednesday week. That afternoon in company with his father and J. Vance he began a search. Thursday afternoon they found the entrails of an animal in the bush. Campbell had certain suspicians. He called at the home of John Freeburn and happened to notice a pot of beef cooking upon the stove. This further aroused his suspicions.

He came to Tweed and securing the necessary papers for search and arrest, placed these in the hands of Constable Andrew Wilson, who accompanied by Constable Molyneaux, went to Freeburn's house and found, upon further search, more fresh beef in the house.

The housekeeper Mrs. Elizabeth Vilneff said that one, Wesley Keller, had left the meat there last Sunday night with the remark, "there's a nice mess of potatoes for your breakfast." John Saunders, she said, was with him at the time.

They then went to Keller's house and on search found more fresh beef and the animals hide in the cellar.

The constables brought Kellar and Freeburn and Mrs. Vilneff to Tweed where they were examined on Friday afternoon. In their stories they implicated John Saunders.

On Saturday the constables went to Madoc Township and secured Saunders who was given a hearing that afternoon. He evidently made an attempt to tell the truth. He stated he had shot the animal and that Kellar skinned and dressed it, each taking a hind quarter and part of a front. They gave a front quarter to Freeburn. Their stories were very disjointed and in many places disconnected, declared that they were out deer hunting. Keller said he thought the animal was a deer. He said he found it with its throat cut and a bullet wound. Freeburn claimed he did not know where the meat came from and that they gave it to him. Saunders and Kellar were convicted and sent to Belleville for sentence; Freeburn was committed for trial; Mrs. Vilneff was given her liberty.

ROBBERS WITH AUTO HELD UP TRAVELLERS NEAR BOUCHERVILLE

Ma il Carrier and Doctor Wer Threatened With Death Unless Money Was Produced

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—A desperate attempt at highway robbery was reported near Boucherville yesterday morning, when Mr. Ostiguy and his daughter were held up at the point of a revolver by highway robbers. Mr. Ostiguy, who is the rural mail carrier for the district, was just finishing his round when the toot of an automobile horn behind him caused him to move one side of the road. In an instant a large automobile with all the coverings down stopped right by him. One of the occupants descended from the car and asked the mail carrier where the road led to. Before he could reply the robber drew his revolver and threatened his would-be informer with death if he moved. Mr. Ostiguy's daughter who was with him, screamed and one of the other men in the car stuck his head out of the window and said "Why don't you shoot?" He did, and the bullet whistled by a few inches from the unfortunate mail carrier's head, with the result that his frightened horse galloped down the road. A few more shots were fired after this, then the men climbed back into their car and disappeared.

Mr. Ostiguy claims there were three men in the automobile and he has given all information to the Boucherville police.

Another Hold-Up Near Longueuil.

A report has also come from Longueuil to the effect that Dr. Poitras, veterinary surgeon of Chambly Basin, was attacked by bandits at eight o'clock Tuesday evening on the highway to Chambly village. He was travelling along the road, and when just near Longueuil, two men jumped out and caught his horse. One of the men brandished a revolver and ordered Dr. Poitras to hand over his money or he would shoot him. The doctor did not lose his nerve, however, but whipped up his horse and galloped down the road, knocking one of the would-be robbers over. Angered at the escape of their intended victim one of the men said, "why don't you shoot?" and the armed robber sent a volley of shots after the retreating vehicle, none of which hit the fugitive, who notified the Longueuil police.

Fog Prevents Tug From Going To Alexandria

Official Make Early Morning Start But They Return Empty Handed

TORONTO, Aug. 5.—The scene at the foot of Scarboro Cliffs this morning, opposite the wrecked freighter Alexandria, of the Canada Steamship Lines, brought back to mind the old days of smuggling. Bare-legged men and boys with bags on their backs and life belts across their breasts, wended their way across the shore line, covered with wreckage, to paths up the cliff sides, which they knew best.

Soon after 7.30 a.m. the Erie King carrying Capt. James Foote, of the Insurance Underwriters, H. H. Cowan, operating superintendent of the Canada Steamship Lines, G. A. Weisbeck, representing the Hull underwriters, and E. W. Steih representing the Lines cargo underwriters, started out from the Yonge street dock to inspect the wreck to see what could be done in the way of salvage. The morning was very misty. It almost looked like a November foggy day in "Old London." What happened to the tug may not be known, but it certainly never reached within hailing distance of the wreck.

When it returned to the Canada Steamship Company's wharves at 12.30 Mr. Cowan would give scant information.

"We did not get within two miles of the boat, and so we know nothing about it.". On being asked what they would likely do with the wrecked boat, Mr. Cowan said: "We are not going to do a thing with it."

Patriotism and Work for Women

The following is the letter sent by Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, President of the National Union of Woman Suffrage Societies. This letter shows the splendid stand taken by the suffrage societies throughout the Empire during the war.

Glen Leven, Lorne Park, Ont.

Dear Mrs. Lang.—

Will you kindly notify all affiliated societies and others concerned that I have decided to postpone my trip to the West until some more favorable occasion. The war has reached such a serious and critical stage that I feel I am in no way justified in using my own and other women's energies and means on behalf of the suffrage cause, when the war, and all that it implies, needs us so urgently.

Though political freedom for the women of Canada is very near to my heart, yet at present, there is a far greater issue at stake, the freedom of the whole Empire, and I feel we should contribute everything in our power, including the sacrifice of our time, means, even of our missionary propaganda, and that no jot or tittle that can be given in effort, should be withheld by us, as patriotic women.

In this connection, I am interested to see what Mrs. Pankhurst said to Lloyd George lately: "Our fight for votes for women is a forgotten issue in the national crisis." . . . . We women of Canada cannot foresee what we may be called upon to do, but in my judgment our immediate duty is obvious.

Yours very truly,
CONSTANCE E. HAMILTON.

STAMFORD REEVE SUED BY G. H. GOODERHAM

Chairman Toronto and Hamilton Highways Commission Alleges Slander

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 5.—Reeve George Rysdale of Stamford was today served with papers in a slander action brought against him by George H. Gooderham, M.P.P. of Toronto, Chairman of the Toronto and Hamilton Highways Commission. The date for hearing at Osgoode Halls has not been fixed. The alleged statement which Rysdale is charged with making at a meeting of the Town Council on May 31 last is as follows:

"The only reasons why concrete roads are being built is that the Chairman of the Highway Commission is interested in a cement company, and it doesn't need much explanation why concrete is being used between Toronto and Hamilton.

French Cruisers Raid Submarine Base

PARIS, Aug. 5.—It is officially announced that one armored cruiser, two cruisers, torpedo boats, dredges and an aeroplane ship of the French fleet demonstrated August 3 and 4 off Sighadjik and Scala Nova, on the coast of Anatolia. August 3 Sighadjik was bombarded and the customs house and part of the fortifications destroyed. On the day following the armored cruiser bombarded the fortifications of the Turkish quarter of Scala Nova and a fortified point to the west of that town, while the other vessels of the squadron shelled and destroyed the village of Spella, supposed to be a supply depot for submarines of France's antagonists.

The foregoing information is contained in a statement given out today by the French Ministry of Marine.

BRITISH INVENTION TO COUNTERACT THE FIRE

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The enemy's use of jets of liquid fire has already been partially counteracted by the chemist who found salts of tungsten will render a fabric or material incapable of burning. The German liquid fire system is not very different from that used for gas shells, which contain a metal bottle that breaks on explosion. The difference is that in one case the gas is lit and the heat developed is very great, but, on the whole, the flame is more terrifying than directly effective.

Germans tried many methods of lighting vapors, namely, directly on explosion by bombs, following spraying of liquid, and by ignition on explosion of the shell.

A despatch sent by Beach Thomas to the Daily Mail said the initial German success was, in fact, due to burning oil but later evidence goes to prove that vapor released was not only or chiefly from stationary pipes or cylinders, but from a huge shell, probably discharged by French mortars.

Foreigner Seeks Vengeance on Wife

Enraged Man Attacks Wife and Friend For Alleged Infidelity

TORONTO, Aug. 6.—A score of knife wounds on her body from her neck to her knees was the punishment which Mrs. Oliva Collona, 112 Elm street, received yesterday afternoon from her husband, Angelo, for alleged infidelity. Michael Giumpietro, of the same address, whom Collona accuses of alienating his wife's affections, also received several wounds during the slashing affray, which took place at the Elm street house and was brought to a close by the arrest of the infuriated Collona by Constable Cater of Agnes street Police Staion. Giumpietro and Mrs. Collona are in the General Hospital. Their condition is serious but not fatal. Collona is charged with wounding.

According to Interpreter Michael Basso, Collona has been employed on a construction gang at Thorold. During his absence he has remitted various sums of money to his wife. On that his wife and child were living with Giumpietro. On her departure from the Collona home Mrs. Collona, it is said, had carried away $90. Collona visited the Elm street house and commenced to slash the couple when his wife refused his offer of reconciliation and his promise that all would be forgotten if she would return to him with their child.

Thought Gas Was Evil Spirits

German gas fumes were taken for evil spirits by the French-African troops who deserted the line at Ypres and made the breach which the Canadians stepped into when they barred the German on-rush. This was the statement of General Ryerson in Convocation Hall, Toronto, last night in the course of an address on his experiences at the front. These black troops fled in thousands, terror-stricken, while the Canadians marched steadily forward to meet the foe. General Ryerson told of pathetic scenes in the deserted homes of people who had left in the midst of breakfast, of drawers pulled out in haste, and private correspondence, family Bibles and family treasures left behind. He met one woman who had sent her child for butter and before the child returned the family had to fly for their lives. The child was never seen again.

In answer to the question as to why the allies were not making much progress, General Ryerson said they had held seven hundred thousand Germans back in the place where they were last October. The whole area was no larger than the county of York. He believed the time was not far off when, with the aid of the shells, which were now being rushed to the front, the Germans will be blown out of their trenches and the allies will move forward.

A collection was taken in behalf of the W.C.T.U. ambulance.

Dynamite Found On the Arabic

Story Has Been Confirmed by the White Star Officials

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Officials of the White Star Line this afternoon confirmed the story that dynamite was found aboard the White Star liner Arabic before she sailed for Liverpool, uly 28. The Arabic arrived at Liverpool from New York today. The police found that the packages contained "sixty per cent." dynamite, which was so old it was extremely sensitive to percussion.

Two Men in Auto Attempt Hold-up

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Early yesterday morning, between 1.30 and 2 o'clock, two hold-up men drove up Esplande avenue in an automobile, leaped from the car at Mary Ann street, and attempted to hold up and rob Samuel Fransten, of 233 Esplanada avenue who was only a few doors from his home. One of the men grabbed Fansten by the left arm, while the other put a revolver to his head and shouted in his ear, "Keep still or I'll blow your head off your shoulders."

Fansten did not keep still. He grabbed the revolver with his right hand and, breaking away from the fellow who was holding him, he struck the one with the gun a blow in the face. Then the two men grabbed Fansten and there was a struggle, in which the three went to the sidewalk in a heap. By clutching with his teeth the hand of the man who hold the revolver, Fansten managed to wrench it away from him as they fought on the sidewalk but when he pulled the trigger in the attempt to shoot one of his assailants, he found that the weapon was not loaded or it missed fire. He struggled hard to retain the revolver and at the same time defend himself from his assailants and prevent them going through his pockets, but they were too much for him and recovered the gun. The man who pulled the revolver from Fansten struck him a blow on the head, with the handle, which stunned him for a moment, and the two broke away and leaped into their automobile. It took them but a moment to start the car and turn it east in Mary Ann street.

Fansten pulled himself together and, seeing his assailants about to get away he ran after the machine shouting for help. His shouts were heard by Constable Gagnon of the St. Lawrence street station, who was on Clark street a short distance below Mary Ann St. in time to see the automobile turn down St. Urbain. The machine was going slowly, but when Gagnon reached Mary Ann and St. Urbain street, the car had speeded up and was out of sight in a few seconds. The shouting of Fansten aroused a number of persons residing in the neighborhood and a few minutes latter, when Lt. Gorman with Constables Paquet and Villineuve, of the St. Lawrence street station, reached Esplanada avenue and Mary Ann street, they found Fansten, surrounded by a dozen excited men and women in scanty attire. Fansten's right eye was slightly discolored, his lip was swollen and his face bruised, showing that ho had been roughly handled, but the police were convinced that he had put up a good battle against odds and was ready for more when he made the hold-up men beat a retreat.

SUBMARINE BLOCKADE PROVED A FAILURE

Germany Lost 26 Since War Began—Has only 40 Available for Raiding—British Admiralty's Plan for Combating Submarines

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The Tribune's London correspondent says the naval experts say Germany has lost a minimum of 29 submarines since the war began. The number may be thirty-five, but they claim no more than 29. Even supposing she has lost only twenty, and that her ceaseless activity in building may have raised her pre-war number to seventy, which is hardly probable, that would leave only fifty, and as a number must be kept to guard her ports and her fleet only forty at most are available for raiding British commerce and these must rest in port to replenish supplies and rest crews for ten days in every thirty.

Experts therefore call the submarine blockade a failure. Steel nets floated by glass bulbs are the principal agency in combatting the submarines. One of them stretches from Dover to the French coast, with openings known only to pilot and patrol boats, which are constantly being changed.

The passage into the Irish Sea, between Ireland and Scotland is similarly blocked. Any impression that the sea is infested with German under-sea boats and that they are lurking off every British port is totally wrong.

Not Organizing New Regiments

PETERBOROUGH, Aug. 6.—A reply has been received from Ottawa in answer to the application that authority be given for the raising of a battalion in Peterborough.

The statement from Ottawa is as follows:

Ottawa, Aug. 5, '15.

J. H. Burnham, Esq.,
Peterborough, Ont.

At the present time we are not organizing any additional regiments, and will probably not do so until present organizations are filled up. When any new regiments are being formed, I have asked the Adjutant-General to keep in mind the claims of Peterborough.

Acting Minister.

Real Praise for Second Canadians

Retired Major-General Who Was at Shorncliffe Writes His Surprise

LONDON, Aug. 6.—A retired Major-General writes The Daily Express as follows:

"I was present at the review at Shorncliffe when Mr. Bonar Law and General Sam Hughes saw the Canadian troops march past. As an old soldier I can say I have never seen finer troops than the thousands who passed in review under the command of Major-General Steele. It was a revelation. Among them was a regiment of French Canadians. The men had stood in a deluge for an hour and a half, but they went by like old soldiers. Not one of them had been a soldier ten months ago. There were enough six-footers among them to make a Guard's Brigade.

It is reported at Kingston that Col. Belton of London will take Lieut.-Col. H. R. Duff's position on the Pension Board.

WESTERN FARMERS PATRIOTIC MOVE

WINNIPEG, Aug. 5.—For a practical expression of patriotism and loyalty it would be difficult to find a better illustration than that which the farmers of Manitoba will provide in the course of the next few weeks. Almost every member of the Manitoba Grain Growers's Association has promised the executive that he will give one acre of his crop to patriotic purposes. It is expected that at least 10,000 acres will thus be aligned and that the proceeds will total considerably over $200,000. The wheat will probably be sent to Winnipeg and sold on the market. The association at Oakburn wants a machine gun purchased with the proceeds from that district.

WIPE OUT VILLAGE TO PREVENT FLOOD

DAYTON, Ohio., Aug. 6.—In line with the plans for prevention of future floods such as wrought disaster to this city and the Miami Valley in March, 1913, the entire village of Osborn, with its four hundred families and more than 1,000 population, will be wiped from the face of the earth.

The flood conservancy commission has perfected plans for acquiring all of the property of the village at a cost of approximately $1,500,000.

SUGGEST FORMING WOMEN'S HOME GUARD

The interesting suggestion that a regiment of women beformed in Toronto, for defence purposes was made to Mayor Church, today, by an anonymous letter sent by a woman who signs herself "England-Ireland-Scotland." "Why cannot we women do more for the Empire in this war?" asks the writer. "Perhaps you will say that we are doing our parts by supplying the soldiers with comforts and needs, but why cannot we be formed into an organization, and if ever we are needed we would be ready. The training would not hurt us, anyway."

Financial Statement Of Canada for July

A Large Increase in Loans and Issue of Dominion Notes Occurred

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—An increase of $92,000,000 in temporary loans, an increase of over $13,000,000 in the net debt of the Dominion, and a further increase of over $16,000,000 in Dominion notes outstanding at the beginning of August, are the chief features in the liability columns of the Dominion's financial statement for the month of July, just published. The increase in temporary loans is partly accounted for by Mr. White's recent $45,000,000 loan made on the New York market.

INCREASE IN REVENUES.

An increase of $443,263 in customs revenue, of $81,427 in excise, of $375,000 in post-office receipts, with a decrease of $525,924 in public works revenue, including railways, and a further decrease of $230,698 in miscellaneous revenue, are the chief features of the revenue column statement. The total increase in revenue for July, as compared with July, 1914, was therefore $133,461. Increases in customs, excise and post-office are due to the new war taxation. Decreases in public works and railways are due to falling off in revenue-earning public works due to the war.

THE DEBT FIGURES.

The total gross debt of the Dominion at the end of July was $734,656,544, of which $362,703,312 is payable in London. Temporary loans totalled $100,673,684. Dominion notes outstanding totalled $152,043,872. The total net debt on July 31st was $463,745,092.

Revenue figures for the month were as follows:—

	1914.	1915.
Customs	$6,807,058	$7,740,321
Excise	1,053,050	1,734,472
Post Office . . .	825,000	1,200,000
Public Works . .	1,678,298	1,152,374
Miscellaneous .	1,558,215	1,327,917
Total revenue .	$12,521,624	$12,655,085

Total expenditure on account of consolidated fund, that is for the expense of running the country as distinguished from expenditure on permanent works, was $16,551,474, or only $3,000,000 less than for July of 1914. July expenditure on capital account, that is, for permanent works, was $3,920,518, of which $3,808,273 was on public works, including railways and canals and $112,245 for railway subsidies.

The total revenue for the first four months of the fiscal year was $29,376,327, as against $32,701,370 for the corresponding period last year.

Expenditure on war is apparently not shown in the statement, but it is estimated to date at about $80,000,000.

CANADIAN FIRMS NOT GETTING ENOUGH WORK

War Orders Going to the United States, Says Mr. W. W. Butler

"I think that, in the face of all Canada is doing for the Old Country, we should have an opportunity to figure more largely in war contracts. Every factory in Canada should be, and could be working to 100 per cent. capacity making munitions. The United States firms are getting a great many of the British War Office contracts that should come to Canada," said Mr. W. W. Butler, vice-president of the Canadian Car and Foundry Co., Montreal, as he summed up the war contract situation.

"My presence here has nothing to do with our contracts with the Russian Government. I am here to see the Canadian Northern people about some cars. That is our legitimate business. Making shells is only a side line, and yet, just now, a matter of bread and butter. We have not kept our plants running to capacity with the Russian orders, having sub-let a good deal of the work to smaller firms. We have kept our plants at Montreal and Amherst ready for the British War Office hoping to be used, but so far our hopes have not been realized."

Manitoba Election

Liberals Expected to be Returned With Good Majority They Say

WINNIPEG, Aug. 6—Cloudless weather, with heat that the crops needs for the next two or three weeks, greeted Manitoba this morning when the polls opened at nine o'clock. The Provincial campaign was brought to a close last night, with both parties emphasizing the necessity of getting out the complete vote, and, though registration was not so large as last year, yet the vote polled to-day will probably be thoroughly representative. The campaign has been quiet, but a good deal of interest has gradually been awakened. It is pointed out that, figuring on prospects, the Liberals should carry the Province with a good majority, but Conservatives speak of the possibility of a big surprise when the rural constituencies report.

WINNIPSG, Aug. 6.—The election for the Province of Manitoba has resulted in the return of the Norris Government by an overwhelming majority. The latest returns give the Liberals thirty-nine seats, the Conservatives five seats and the Social Democrats one. The elections in The Pas, Grand Rapids and Churchill and Nelson were deferred, and these constituencies will likely add to the Government's majority.

The unparalleled character of the landslide in Manitoba is shown by the fact that the standing of the parties in the Legislature last May, when the Roblin Government resigned, was twenty-eight Conservatives as against twenty-one Liberals.

Cabinet Members Increase Majorities

Furthermore, every member of the Norris Cabinet was returned to power to-day with majorities which were greatly increased over those of July, 1914. Premier Norris was elected by a majority of 812 in Lansdowne, his opponent, W. J. Cundy, losing his deposit. Hon. A. B. Hudson, Attorney-General, and Hon. T. H. Johnson, Minister of Public Works, won by 4,000 and 4,255, respectively, in Winnipeg, their opponents also losing their deposits. Hon. Dr. Armstrong, Provincial Secretary won in Gladstone by a majority of 404; Hon. Dr. Thornton, Minister of Education, won in Deloraine by 295, and Hon. Val. Winkler, Minister of Agriculture, won in Morden-Rhineland by 468. Hon. Edward Brown, Provincial Treasurer, still stands as Liberal candidate for The Pas.

On the other hand, not one of the leaders of Hon. Robert Rogers' party remains on the scene. Sir James Aikins went down to defeat in Brandon before S. E. Clement by 697 votes, followed by his lieutenant, W. H. Sharpe, who lost in Manitou to George T. Armstrong by 87 votes. Mr. Sharpe's defeat, by the way, is due in large measure to the efforts of Mrs. Nellie McClung, who returned to her old home town of Manitou last week in the interests of Mr. Armstrong.

Hon. George Lawrence, the ex-Minister of Agriculture in the Roblin Government, who was retained in the Conservative party as the only innocent member of the old Cabinet, was defeated by S. M. Hayden by 127 votes. Gimli also is a feature Although the full returns are not in yet from the outlying constituencies, the Liberal candidate, Furley, is leading by 484, with only five polls to hear from.

Demonstration Awaits Return Home of Premier

OTTAWA, Aug. 6.—While plans have not yet been made in view of the uncertainty as to the date of his return, it is understood that a huge demonstration is likely to be arranged in honor of Sir Robert Borden when he returns from his visit to the Old Country. It is proposed to arrange a welcome that will last all the way from the ocean's edge to Ottawa, and a demonstration absolutely non-partizan in character will be sought.

It is generally thought that the visit of the Prime Minister to Imperial Councils has been fraught with importance to Canada as regards her status in the Empire. The first colonial statesman to attend a meeting of the British Privy Council, Sir Robert has everywhere, in England and in France, been enthusiastically acclaimed as Canada's first citizen.

A BIG STEP TAKEN.

The Premier's visit to the Old Country means that the Dominion's voice will hereafter be heard in Imperial affairs and that one of the longest steps forward in the perfection of an Empire constitution has been taken.

Sir Robert's visit having been of such importance, it is felt as only fitting that his return should be fittingly marked, and accordingly, arrangements to that effect have been initiated by a number of his friends. Sir Robert is expected back to Canada about the end of this month.

Canadian Lake Boat Midland Was Torpedoed

Steamer Taken by the Imperial Gov't From Ontario Waters

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The Canadian steamer Midland Queen has been torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine. The crew was rescued.

The Midland Queen sailed from Sidney, C.B., July 21 for Manchester. It was sunk on Tuesday last.

The crew consisted of 22, and the chief officer's wife and child. They were rescued after being 72 hours in open boats.

How or where the Midland Queen was sunk is not given in the foregoing despatch, which is in accordance with the recent announcement made by the British Admiralty that it will no longer make public information showing the waters in which German submarines are operating, but it is presumed that the vessel was sent to the bottom by a torpedo fired by an undersea boat.

The Midland Queen was a steel freighter about 250 feet long, which used to run between Midland, Owen Sound, Fort William, Sault Ste. Marie and other ports on the upper lakes. She was registered at Midland. She was one of a number of lake freighters which were transferred to the British Government for transport service by the Canada Steamship Lines. The City of Midland is the first of these vessels to be torpedoed. She was wel known on the lakes. The crew was not the one that sailed her on the upper lakes, but the men were largely Canadians, mostly from Nova Scotia.

The fact that she sailed on July 21 and was torpedoed on Aug. 3 would indicate that the steamer was near the British coast when the submarine got her.

Some months ago the Imperial Government secured a number of Canadian lake boats, and it was rumored at the time they were to be used on the Atlantic coast, but no official statement was made.

Burglars Whipped By College Girls

WELLSBURG, W. Va., Aug. 6.—Outwitted and outfought two burglars who had the temerity to enter the room of Mary Hogg, aged 19 and Dorothy Dare aged 18, coeds in the West Liberty College at West Liberty, near here, were lucky to get away after they had been unmercifully pummelled by the girls and thrown through an open window.

The girls were awakened at an early hour in the morning by a sound of shuffling feet somewhere in their room. Accustoming their eyes to the dim light the coeds made out two burglars kneeling in front of a dresser, stuffing the valuables they found into a handbag.

Slipping cautiously from their beds the girls dashed several boxes of face powder into the eyes of the burglars before the latter discovered what was happening. With the burglars almost helpless because of their inability to see, Miss Dare seized a heavy hair brush and began pounding them over the head, while Miss Hogg, with a heavy pitcher, put in an occasional blow.

H. Holloway From Port Dalhousie Caught by Weeds While Swimming

NIAGARA CAMP, Aug. 6.—Caught in the weeds, Private H. Holloway, of the river picket, was drowned while swimming in Niagara River some distance below the Queenston bridge yesterday afternoon. Holloway was attached to the Queenston Brigade Squad and lived at Port Dalhousie. The signalers of the 37th Battalion, who were practicing with the heliograph between Brock's monument and the camp, flashed the news to the camp.

URGE POPE TO QUIT ROME

BASEL, Aug. 6.—German and Austrian journals continue to urge the necessity of the Pope's quitting Rome.

They agree that the most preferable shelter for him would be the Benedictine Abbey of Ensiendein, near Zurich, where the Swiss Government has discreetly advised His Holiness that he would find absolute security.

CHARGED WITH THEFT OF GOV'T HORSE

Four Men Arrested While Trying to Sell Animal Bearing French Army Brand

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Joe Smith, 19, of 14 Knox street; Walter Reed, 18, of 65 Knox street; George Boston, 19, of 329 Bourgeois street, and Gleaton McManus, 18, of 28 Paris street, pleaded not guilty in the Arraignment Court yesterday to stealing a horse, the property of the French Government, from the corral on Bridge street. The accused were caught trying to sell the horse bearing the mark "EU", which Mr. Patrick Ward who is purchasing horses for the French Government, had missed for several days. The four youths were found in the vicinity of Edmond's farm on Lasalle Road, Verdun, where they were caught by constables of the Verdun Police Force, who had been notified that the young men were trying to dispose of the animal at a figure which aroused suspicion as to where they had obtained the horse. The accused will come up for the enquete this morning.

Financial Letter

ROBERT E. KEMERER.

TORONTO, Aug. 7.—During the week the stock markets of both Canada and the United States has given evidence of a greater amount of public interest in securities of both the speculative and investment classes, than has been apparent at any time during the past three years. Retrospection in the public mind is prone to stop short at the collapse and disruption of financial affairs which occurred a year ago on the outbreak of war, losing sight of the fact that the previous two years had not been years of activity in the stock markets. It is well, however, to bear this point in mind as, now that general interest is returning to the stock markets, the public is in a vastly better position to buy shares than if an active market prior to the declaration of war had left large amounts of securities on the hands of traders at prices higher than were then ruling. There is no doubt whatever but that the public at large is in a position to take a heavy interest in the markets. Savings and demand deposits have increased on an almost unprecedented scale, real estate speculation, particularly in Canada has practically died out, and the general improvement in industrial and labour conditions is making for further surpluses.

The barometric value of the steel statement is so generally understood that there is no need to go into that phase of the matter, save to emphasize the point that the statements have shown a strong progressive tendency in improvement, and not simply a sudden and transitory advance, and to further point out that the Steel Company is not directly handling war orders but is showing its increases on its usual classes of business.

Recruiting Rally In Baldwin Ward

A fine recruiting meeting under the auspices of the Belleville Speakers' Patriotic League was held last evening at Queen Mary School in West Belleville. The spacious assembly room of the school was filled with ladies, men and children, who evidently took much interest in the proceedings. Previous to the meeting the 15th Regiment band discoursed a number of patriotic selections, playing upon the lawn in front of the school. It was an inspiring audience that greeted Mr. W. A. G. Hardy, chairman of the ward committee, when he arose as the presiding officer to open the meeting. He was, as he expressed himself, delighted at the manner in which the residents of the ward had turned out.

During the evening five addresses were made, and all were earnest appeals for enlistment. They were interspersed with patriotic songs.

Mayor Panter was the first speaker, and in his opening remarks said it was gratifying to see such a large audience present, but such was characteristic of West Belleville people, who were ever ready to turn out and do their duty when it was necessary. He referred to the present war and the position Great Britain was taking in the struggle. Germany, as it had been shown, was prepared for this great struggle, whereas the Allies were not prepared, but at present there is every prospect that the Allies are about to strike a great blow. In speaking of enlistment His Worship said that whilst parents were making sacrifices the cause called for sacrifice. When the boys come back from the front there would be a warm welcome for them.

Mr. E. Mouck sang with much effect "Rule Britannia."

Ald. Platt was next called upon and gave an excellent address. He said that all agreed with the song that had been sung. All believed in their hearts that Britons never would be slaves. All through British history it is shown that the nation has ever been ready to defend liberty. Last year England had some internal troubles, but all religious differences were dropped when war was declared, and they said that Britons never will be slaves. In early history Great Britain had fought great battles as she is doing today. The British fleet downed Napoleon and it will down the fleet of Germany. The freedom we enjoy will not go down. Must this Empire die? No! We are not a cowardly race; and Canada's sons and daughters if need be will give their all to keep the flag flying to the breeze. In literature and art what has the Empire done for the world? Wherever you look at Great Britain you see great men, and we have them today. We remember such men as Gladstone, Burns, Salisbury; and today what grand men we have, including that Welshman, Lloyd George. (Applause). The British Empire is founded on right, justice and religious freedom, and God would not let these principles go down. We are going to do our best and mothers and fathers will allow their sons to go over and assist those who are at present in the trenches and eventually we will come out more than conquerors. (Applause).

Col. Ketcheson spoke briefly, referring to the fact that he was present because his heart was in the matter. He had offered his services and was prepared to go to the front when called upon. The colonel outlined the pay which recruits would receive and also what a wife and family would receive if her husband went to the front. He would ask the young men to enlist and wear the khaki. If a man is injured in the war he and his family would be provided for by a pension.

Mr. Stallworthy sang a patriotic selection.

Rev. Dr. Blagrave, Rector of Christ Church, was next called upon and he gave t most interesting and inspiring address. He referred to the pleasure it gave him to be present and address a gathering from Murney Ward. It was every man's duty to do what he could at the present time for his country. Those who cannot go to the front have a duty to perform at home. Some young men are not enlightened as they should be as to the seriousness of this great war. It is a serious conflict; of that there is not the slightest doubt. We are wiser than we were a year ago, wiser as to our resources, and wiser as to the resources of the enemy. Mr. Blagrave referred to the power of the enemy and what it is doing. We must appreciate the gravity of the occasion. In the face of what has and is transpiring we must do our part for the Empire of which we form a part. We wrestle against a great foe, a combined foe of Austrians and Germans. Britain has ever stood for freedom and religious liberties. In speaking of the present war he said Germany suddenly awoke and said "We want more power." By duplicity and falsehood it sowed the seed of discord with other countries. Germany said we must get what we have lost in the past. Prussia dominated Germany and Austria by its ideas. They set to work until today they are an amazement to the world. In order to accomplish her aim Germany said all men must be armed. This is Germany's resolution; this is Germany's militarism. How is it that all Germans are loyal to the Fatherland? The answer is found in the fact that from childhood up all are taught loyalty. The liberty of the whole world is threatened. Germany has no regard for that which is sacred to Great Britain. Canada, with her young idealism, is asked to do her share in the work. She has done well, but more must be done. Those Canadians who have sacrificed their lives are calling upon all to do our duty. The dead are appealing to us. The most of those gone will come back when the great struggle is over. Canadians must realize that we are threatened, and if we do not go willingly we may be compelled to go. The speaker concluded by reading a recruiting poem as to the call to arms.

Miss Ponton sang effectively a patriotic selection and responded to an encore.

Col. Ponton, as usual, gave one of his inspiring addresses and it was delivered with an earnestness which could not be mistaken. In his opening remarks he stated that there should not be any necessity for speeches, but that the air should be charged with a fervent spirit for duty. We want willing men, men who feel that the call to duty is for him. From Canada there will come willing fighting men. We will send the bravest and best of this country to fight for Canada. It is for the homes the boys are now going out to fight. We are going to fight this battle, and all who go will not die. We are met here to show those who are in doubt their duty, and to tell those who have enlisted and will enlist that they are going as our trustees and we will give our pledge that we are behind them, and they will share with us in what we have. The men who have gone and are going are the right arm of the Empire, going to keep Canada for the Empire. It is the glory of service to wear the King's uniform. The man who will serve his country will prove to be a noble man. If you cannot go yourself get a recruit. We expect many recruits will come from Murney Ward. The boys who are fighting in the trenches are beckoning to their brothers in this land to come over and help them to return home sooner. We want the gallant men, not to die, but to fight and assist in making peace. Who calls you? The King and Queen, who have a son at the front, fighting with comrades. Go to fight and avenge the atrocities that have been perpetrated. We are going to fight, and we want trained men. In referring to those who have gone and what is being done he said the 49th regiment and other regiments were doing their duty. There is today virtually no specified 15th or 49th. All were for the Empire. The colonel said it was a fact that Germany had secured a portion of Belgium and some of France, but Great Britain had secured 450,000 square miles of German territory.

The speaker then exhibited a number of recruiting posters he had received from the old country, all of which appealed for recruits. These posters showed the loss of the Lusitania, the sword of justice, and last, but not least, a colored flag, with the words, "it is our flag; fight for it, work for it." These posters were explicitly explained by the speaker. In concluding the Colonel said the path of duty was the path to glory.

Mr. E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P., was the last speaker, and whilst his remarks were of a brief nature they were to the point. He explained why the meetings were being held in the various wards of the city. It was felt throughout the city that the young men were not responding with that alacrity with which they should respond; not that they were cowards, but the needs of the situation were not thoroughly understood. The speaker explained the object of the present campaign and the results that were accruing. We should all realize that we are recruiting sergeants for the British Empire. All have influence and should make this a personal matter. Do your bit first and do it now. We feel sure that success will attend our efforts. If our young men would think that their homes are insecure they would wake up and do their duty. Our homes are in jeopardy. There is only one way to make this war end the way we desire it to end, and that is by the young men enlisting. We want men behind the guns, and we want young men. They can perform this service better than older men. Young men can go without making as great a sacrifice as the older men would have to make. This was an opportunity for young men to be classed as heroes. Will you be a hero and do your duty, or will you have the finger of scorn pointed at you. This matter is left to the honor of the man; he s not forced to go. Every young man who volunteers is a hero and is recognized as such. Ladies can do much in this campaign. While they cannot shoulder a musket or go to the firing line they can and will have to make sacrifices. There was no greater honor than for a man to fight for his country; and he had no doubt that all would do their duty in this hour of trial.

On motion of Mayor Panter, seconded by Col. Ponton, a vote of thanks was tendered to the 15th Regiment band and those who had assisted in the programme.

The proceedings closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

OPIUM VALUED AT THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS FOUND

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Following closely upon the arrest of John Lewis, a seaman of the White Star liner Irishman, now in port from Liverpool, who was caught by Constable Mahodey of the Harbor Police on Monday night at Alexandra Gate trying to get through with fifteen tins of opium valued at $400 in his possession, the officers of the steamer searched their vessel yesterday with the result that two hundred more tins of opium, valued at $3,000 were discovered. After the discovery it was noticed that two other members of the crew, Quartermaster Price and Mess-Room Steward Rainford disappeared. It is believed that they were implicated with Lewis in the attempt to defeat the customs officials and officers of the steamer are now leaving no stone unturned to find out who on the ship had anything to do with the opium consignment.

Notices have been posted in all the quarters of the men offering a reward for information which will lead to the conviction of any member of the crew connected with the opium smuggling.

Found Drug in Funnel

The two hundred tins of opium were found by one of the officers yesterday morning after twenty-four hours' search. The opium had been placed in one of the ventilator funnels, where it was discovered by officers yesterday. The stuff was seized while the men were at their breakfasts, officials of the local customs having been notified of the discovery. Inspector White took possession of the contraband.

Canadian trade decreased about $159,000,000 during the year ending with June, as compared with the previous year.

Pickpockets at Brockville recently relieved one victim of $200 and another of a pocketbook with no money, but some valuable papers.

MANITOBA ELECTION.

The election for the Province of Manitoba took place yesterday; but at the time of writing we have received no indication as to how the voting went. The newly formed and reformed Conservative party put before the electors a substantial programme of reforms, which if carried out would prevent a recurrence of the events which have brought about the present election. It includes the amending of the Controverted Elections Act to prevent saw-offs by providing for compulsory hearing of election protests; total abolition of the patronage system in connection with Government supplies and contracts; the appointment of an auditor-general, who may be dismissed only upon a two-thirds vote of the Legislature, to open all tenders in public, to investigate and certify to all payments, and to have power to summon and examine persons under oath; the total elimination of the spoils system of civil service, and the appointments to and retentions in that service to be based upon merit and efficiency alone; and the strict enforcement of election laws.

That, in addition to "clean and business-like administration, and the abolition of manipulation and 'machine' politics," is a sweeping and comprehensive programme to put before the electors. But there are several other policies to which the Conservative party, under the leadership of Sir James Aikins, stand pledged. They include a broad educational policy upon the principle of promoting efficiency and the provision of an adequate elementary education for every child, irrespective of race or creed; the inculcation of a thorough knowledge of English; the furthering of agricultural education and adequate assistance for the University of Manitoba. The repeal of the Coldwell amendments to the Public Schools Act and Women's Suffrage is also included in the policies of the Conservative party, who also favor total prohibition so far as is possible under Manitoba's powers, by the reenactment of the Hugh John Macdonald act of 1900, with no provisions for referendum or repeal. It is doubtful if the Province is ripe for such a drastic measure as total prohibition. It is certain the Province of Ontario is not. The overwhelming defeat of the "Banish the Bar" party at the last election plainly demonstrated that.

The unfortunate circumstances which brought about the change of Government will doubtless prejudice the prospects of the Conservative party, although if they were successful at the polls the electors might be assured that under the leadership of Sir James Aikins they would have the clean and efficient administration that they desire. But the Liberal party have so ordered affairs that we should be surprised to see the Conservatives triumph. The Commission they appointed to enquire into the Fullerton charges did their best to whitewash the Liberals, and returned a favourable verdict—quite opposed to the evidence—conveniently before the election. They based their decision upon the denials of Premier Norris, who professed to be innocently unaware of any negotiations having taken place between members of his own party and the Conservatives. Despite these disclaimers there will be a good proportion of the electors who will still believe that there was an arrangement by which certain Liberals agreed to accept $50,000, and that $25,000 was handed over to them. They will fail to see any difference between the Liberals who were so politically corrupted and those Conservatives who sought to corrupt them. If they returned Sir James Aikins to power they would find the political machine purged of these imperfections, and would enjoy as clean government as we do in Ontario.

CURRENT COMMENT

If a vote is ever taken on the question of conscription the men at the front have a right to record their sentiment.

If the German Governor of Belgium, von Bissing, is recalled, it will not be because he has failed to gouge enough money out of the poor Belgians.

Mr. I. T. Lincoln, the Austrian spy and Ex-M.P., who posed as a British patriot in England, and whose exploits were recorded in The Intelligencer, may be extradited from the United States on a charge of forgery.

Herr Albert Ballin has been awarded the Iron Cross by the Kaiser. Perhaps the honor will in a measure compensate the noted steamship magnate for any misery he may feel when he thinks of the many big German vessels lying idle in foreign ports because of the activity of the British navy.

A new Belgian gray book asserts that in April, 1914, the German minister of foreign affairs proposed to the French ambassador the participation of the Belgian Congo and asserted that the small states of Europe were destined to disappear. That was clearly the principle on which Germany acted in August, 1914, whether it was avowed in the preceding April or not.

"Billy, dear," remarked the young bride as hubby returned home at the usual hour, "I have made some lovely pies for supper. I was going to have sponge cake, too, but my plans were upset." "That's too bad," responded Billy, looking real disappointed. "What was the trouble?" "It was all the druggist's fault," was the surprising rejoinder of wifey. "He forgot to send around the sponges."—Philadelphia Star.

An importation this week of nearly $2,000,000 in gold from Canada has brought the total of importations of the metal thus far this year to $126,110,000. We have much more gold than we need, but we would have very much in addition to this if our foreign debtors were paying their bills in the metal. They are turning all ways to devise methods for payment that do not require the transfer of gold. That does not trouble us so long as the security is sound.—Buffalo Express.

It is figured that, at a minimum the Teutonic allies are shooting off 300 tons of cotton a day. This means 1,200 bales of 500 pounds each. The maximum estimate is 1,000 tons a day, or 4,000 bales. It is thus seen how essential it is that the Teutons get cotton and how necessary it is for the western allies to keep it away from them. The fact doubtless is that Germany had a great store of raw cotton against the day when war might come. Raw cotton will keep.

Among the officers in the new regiment for the front being formed at Berlin and Waterloo, Ont., are Major Schmaltz, Lieutenants Krietzer, Schneider and E. and A. L. Breithaupt. And there are many more such names in the lists of those who have volunteered from this country for service in Europe. The Canadian of German descent evidently is as willing to fight for his country as his fellow-citizens whose forefathers came from other lands.

That which is most surprising and most original in the Imperial manifesto is the part taken by the Kaiser in speaking of a defensive war, which has been imposed upon him by his peers, and that would not be acceptable but to gratify the wish of the German people. 'We admit that the German people fight and fight well, but we do not admit that this people are exercising their own free will in the matter. Following the political constitution of Germany, the only will which has the right to manifest itself and to be obeyed, is that of the Emperor. Therefore it is the Emperor and no other who should be held responsible for the present war.—La Press.

In Germany the campaign against foreign words has extended to the names of dogs even, and the boarhounds are being rechristened Blitz, Flamme, Zorn, etc., in English, Lightning, Flame and Anger, while milder names are being applied to the daschunds. The changes will neither make the Towsers of the Fatherland more ferocious nor more tame. They do indicate that the responsible persons might learn a little from their four-legged pets. On the other hand, the Vienna roll, with its new appellation, is the same old bread, and the erstwhile Hamburger steak is still fried hash.—Montreal Gazette.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

The cost of living has risen to such a prodigious height that many of our people are leading an existence that would be unfit for a dog.

This is due neither to the English plans of starvation nor to want of supplies. It is the ruthless speculations of dealers and of a part of the producers that have brought about these conditions.

In Bavaria, as in the empire generally, the Social Democratic party has repeatedly drawn the attention of the authorities to the extreme urgency of immediate legislation in this matter. All these efforts were in vain, all entreaties fell on deaf ears. The Bavarian Government declined to appeal to the people's representatives in Parliament to regulate the food supply.

In view of this perilous state of things, popular meetings and demonstrations will be held in every town in Bavaria, and petitions to the Government will be drafted, with the support of the entire Bavarian Press, with the view of obtaining some relief.

If the athorities wish to undermine the noble patriotism and self-sacrificing spirit of our people, there is no surer way of bringing this about than by declining to give ear to the ever louder cry for food at prices within measurable reach of all.—Munchener Post.

The Poet's Corner

THE THINGS THAT ARE REAL.

He was only a mountain dweller,
His cabin was rude and old;
But his mind was lofty as mountain peaks,
And his heart as pure as their gold.

He had heard of the distant cities
And he wondered how they would look;
For they were to him remote and dim,
A wonderful picture book.

So he left his humble cabin
On the lonely mountain side
And took his way to the city streets
Where the human throngs abide.

As he heard the din and clamor
Of the city's noisy ways,
He thought of the song of the mountain stream
Or the wind on summer days.

As he looked at the painted pictures
In the city galleries wide,
He longed to see the red sunset
Over the mountain side.

In vain he watched the faces
For a welcome smile or word,
And his heart cried out with hunger
For the single song of a bird.

Well—he took his way back to the cabin,
In that far-away lonely spot,
Where he'd lived so long with the things that are real,
That he could not be happy with those that were not.

RANDOM NOTES

Recruiting is proceeding steadily in Belleville, and the two meetings held this week have been in every way successful. At the Ann Street School meeting Lieut. Wilkins—one of the wounded soldiers from the front was present, and said a few words in favor of recruiting. It was not generally known until that night that he was in the city. This fact induces me to ask the question—Are we doing the right thing in allowing these returned soldiers to quietly enter the town without giving them anything in the nature of a welcome?

There can be but one answer, I think, to this question. They are deserving of the warmest welcome we can possibly accord them. We very properly give a hearty send off to the boys who go to the front; but to my mind those who have been through the horrors of war and come home disabled—perhaps permanently—are deserving of our warmest sympathy and should receive all possible honors. This is the opinion of Col. Ponton, and I am thoroughly in accord with him.

It should be the duty of some one to ascertain when these heroes—no matter whether they are officers or privates—are coming to Belleville; and the least that could be done would be to send an automobile to the station and drive them home. One poor fellow, with frozen feet, limped on to the platform the other day almost unnoticed. The joy he experienced at getting back to Belleville was probably sufficient for him. But at the same time it seems to me to be a remissness that these war-worn warriors should be allowed to return to the city without any effort being made to show them how greatly we appreciate what they have done for our country and ourselves.

After taking 1000 ZUTOO TABLETS
Says they are Harmless

Mrs. (Dr.) Shurtleff, of Coaticook, says "Zutoo Tablets must have cured 500 of my headaches, for I have taken 1000 tablets. After trying every remedy within reach, I discarded them all four years ago for ZUTOO, which I have taken ever since.
I find the tablets a harmless and efficient cure for all kinds of headache."

A good many people have puzzled over the pronunciation of "Ypres," which I believe the Tommies at first called "Wypres." It is surprising to be told that we have unconsciously alluded to the place daily for three hundred years. The refusal of the English of Elizabeth's day to pronounce the name of the town of Ypres, where British troops have recently been fighting, gave us our word "diaper." No Englishman would say "drap d'Ypres" (cloth of Ypres) in the French style of "dra deeper," but in the English style of "dyeper" cloth, and from "dyeper" was coined the familiar word of "diaper."

The statement of General Ryerson that the French-African troops took the German gas fumes for evil spirits, fully explains why these black troops fled in their thousands terror-stricken. I had read before that they did not stand upon the order of their going, but simply bolted, riding two or three on a horse in their mad rush to get as far as possible from the scene of war. We can now the better understand the reason for their wild helter-skelter. It left the Canadians quite unprotected on one side, and gave them the opportunity to distinguish themselves in a way which makes us all proud of them. The Canadian boys faced the "evil spirits" with a steadiness and bravery which will be recalled with pride for many a long day.

Judge Decided Delicate Point

Once a Month is Safety Margin for Lady to be Intoxicated

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Interesting information was gleaned in the Practice Court yesterday afternoon when Mr. Justice Lane was confronted with the delicate task of determining what practically amounted to deciding how often a person should be "in liquor" to merit interdiction at the request of anxious and zealous friends. The case before the court in this instance was unusual in being an application by a husband to have his spouse interdicted for imbibing beer and whiskey. The usual procedure encountered in local courts is that of wives seeking to restrain their husbands.

His Lordship, after hearing numerous witnesses, including landladies, their husbands and friends, evidently came to the conclusion that there was a safety margin in "going under" three times in that many months which appeared to be the average of the lady in question.

If interdictions were granted for drunkenness three times in three months, I fear there would be many," commented the court, and dismissed the petition.

"I cannot live with her, and what's more, I won't," declared the husband on hearing this judgment. "I am afraid of my life, that's the trouble. I know all about it; I have to live with her day and night."

The evidence of one landlady with whom the husband and wife lived for some months showed that the wife was very pleasant in character generally, but given to calling hard names when under the influence. The witnesses could recall only four such cases, however, from November, 1914, to May 1st, 1915, each followed by periods of sickness and consequent repentance.

Another witness, an unmarried lady, was very forcible in her denunciation of the drink habit, and was proceeding at a great rate to explain her views on the "demon rum" subject. She, herself, did not indulge.

"How old are you?" counsel for the defence asked.

"That is for me to keep to myself," was the vigorous retort, and that ended the matter.

Painful Swollen Veins Quickly Relieved and Reduced

Mrs. R. M. Remler of Federal, Kansas writes an interesting account of her success in reducing a severe case of enlarged veins that should be encouraging to others similarly afflicted. She suffered with badly swollen and inflamed veins (in fact one had broken), for more than seven years before she became acquainted with Absorbine Jr., and used it. Absorbine, Jr., was faithfull applied for several weeks and, to quote from her letter, "The large knots in the veins left, it was all nicely healed, and has not bothered me since."

Absorbine, Jr., is an antiseptic liniment—healing, cooling, and soothing. Safe and pleasant to use. $1.00 and $2.00 at your druggist's or postpaid. Liberal trial bottle postpaid for 10c. in stamps. W. F. Young, P.D.F. 457 Lymans Bldg. Montreal, Can.

Recruits to go As Harvesters

Gov't Encourages Men at the Camps To Drop Rifle for Pitchfork

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Word has been received at Divisional Headquarters by Col. E. W. Wilson, O.C., 4th Division, that exceptionally generous arrangements have been made by the Dominion Government to assist in the garnering of the western wheat crop by allowing furlough to soldiers at the various active service training camps in order that they may go to the work.

Orders have been issued to the effect that N.C.O.'s and men of good character will be granted furlough of a month for this purpose. The leave will only be granted for bona fide harvesters, and every man must show proof that he has obtained promise of work before he gets off. On exhibiting this proof, they will be provided with transportation to and from any locality not more than 300 miles from their training camp. Not only this, but while their pay will be withheld during their absence it will be given them in a lump for the month if on their return they show that they have been engaged in harvesting work and have behaved themselves properly. To secure this pay they will have to produce a certificate from the person for whom they were working, or else proof that they were working on their own farms. Any man who misconducts himself during his furlough will forfeit the month's bonus. The only other provision is that the men on leaving camp shall turn in all their regimental outfit and go to work in their civilian clothes. The privilege is not extended to officers, who are not supposed to engage in manual labor.

It is evident from the provisions of transportation that this arrangement is made particularly for the benefit of the western camps, situated close to wheat fields, where it is estimated 30,000 harvesters will be required. A scarcity is feared, owing to the large number of men who have enlisted, and the new regulation will help considerably.

The scheme may, however, be taken up in eastern camps also, since these soldier harvesters will be making good money. A man getting a month's furlough for harvesting might get, if prices of former years rule, from $2 to $3 a day, with all found and in addition his regular military pay of from $1.10 to $1.50 a day. This would mean around $4 a day during the holiday, which should leave most of them with a handsome roll at the end of the month.

Since the war has shown that harvests of grain are as much a military necessity as munitions, the new regulation is considered a wise precaution.

INTERNATIONAL OSTEPATHIC CONVENTION

PORTLAND, Oregon, Aug. 6.—The annual convention of the American Osteopathic Association is in session here during the entire week. It is really an international instead of an American congress, as it is the official organization of all the practitioners of this school in the world, the physicians of Canada, particularly, being members of it. There are 150 members in Ontario. About a thousand delegates are present from every state in the country and a few from Europe. The doctors have utilized the whole city, the exercises opening with health sermons by osteopaths in the pulpits of the churches Sunday, followed Monday by public lectures in the Opera House and technical lectures, clinics and exhibits in the Hotel Multnomah all the week. There were exhibited for the first time in public moving pictures of Dr. Andrew T. Still, the founder of osteopathy, showing him still active in his 88th year, reviewing a procession of graduates at the commencement exercises of the college at Kirksville, Mo., the birthplace of this school of practice. The convention was thrown into a scene of wildest enthusiasm when the moving likeness of the "Father of Osteopathy" appeared upon the screen, as many of the delegates had never seen him, and, owing to his advanced years, this may be their only opportunity to see such a vivid portrayal.

Dr. C. A. Upton of St. Paul, president of the Association, presided at the sessions. Among those who preached health sermons in the churches on Sunday were Dr. Ira W. Drew of Philadelphia, Dr. Clara E. Sullivan of Wheeling, W. Va., Dr. Mary Lyle Sims of Columbia, S.C., Dr. T. J. Ruddy of Los Angeles, Dr. Asa Willard of Missoula, Mont., Dr. Chas. C. Reid of Denver, Dr. C. J. Snyder of Philadelphia, Dr. A. G. Hildreth of Macon, Mo., and Dr. C. B. Atzen of Omaha.

Hon. T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer and Mr. John T. White, solicitor of the Treasury Department, left for San Francisco, where they will attend the ninth annual conference of the National Tax Association of America.

Italy is on Verge of War With Turkey

ROME, Aug. 6.—The tension between Italy and Turkey is declared here to be becoming daily more acute. Italy is said to have asked for categorical explanations concerning Turkey's alleged refusal to withdraw her troops from the Cyrenaica district in Tripoli and Turkey is pursuing what is described as her usual policy of procrastination.

In official circles here the feeling is held that hostilities on the part of Italy may commence at any moment, as Italy's last note to Turkey was almost of the character of an ultimatum. Two hundred and fifty thousand men in the provinces of Bari, Foggia and Lecce are said to be prepared to sail from Brindisi on short notice.

Tremendous Demand for Hair Tonic

Parisian Sage is Guaranteed to Grow Hair

Parisian Sage has been so honestly advertised that its tremendous sales have surprised and even astonished dealers everywhere.

The idea that advertising copy must exaggerate the merits of the goods it aims to sell is false, and the sales of Parisian Sage prove it.

Parisian Sage won't grow hair on bald heads; it isn't guaranteed to grow hair on bald heads.

But if your hair is thin; if it is falling out or splitting at the ends; if your scalp itches and you are bothered with dandruff, the makers of Parisian Sage guarantee it to put an end to these troubles or money back.

Parisian Sage makes hair grow if used before the hair root is dead. It kills the dandruff germs and stops itching scalp. It nourishes the hair roots and falling hair ceases. It puts vitality into the hair and gives it a radiant lustre.

Sold for only 50 cents a large bottle by druggists everywhere.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

Boy Stowaway Told Queer Tale

Reached Shorncliffe Camp After Twice Hiding on Canadian Troopships

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Few boys have travelled so far or so cheaply as a little lad of twelve, who came into Major Patch's office at Divisional Headquarters yesterday in charge of a returned N.C.O. from the Princess Patricias, wondering what would be done with him after he had twice been caught as a stowaway, twice crossed the Atlantic, and had a number of other adventures on land and sea. The lad was Peter Routledge, a sturdy bluenose from Sydney, N.S., who gave his official age as 14, and cheerfully explained that he was only twelve, but thought fourteen sounded better.

Peter explained that both his parents were dead, and that he had been living with friends. When the war broke out, Peter broke out too and decided that henceforth he would be a soldier. Having no money, he beat his way in some mysterious way to Quebec, evaded the guards at the dock, and elected himself as a stowaway on the Virginian, loaded with Canadian soldiers of the First Canadian Contingent.

"But they caught me to soon that time," said Peter, "and put me ashore at Gaspe Bay."

This did not daunt the young adventurer, and he made his way to Halifax, whence the Canadian troops were sent in winter. He picked up a living there in some way, and once again smuggled himself aboard a troop ship, picking the Caledonian this time.

Couldn't Learn Calls.

"I waited until the ship had got well out to sea," said young Routledge, 'and when I knew I was safe I came out. They didn't do anything to me, and I used to try and drill with the soldiers on the way over. I stayed right with them, and got to Shorncliffe camp all right. They tried to make a bugler of me there, but it wasn't any good—I tried all I could, but I just couldn't learn the calls, so they sent me back again."

Peter returned to Montreal on the Hesperian with a party of invalided soldiers, who took care of him, and staked him with $5. Armed with this and his native cheek, the boy called at Divisional Headuarters yesterday, and made enquiries like a veteran as to what was to be done with him.

As his case did not come within any known military regulation, the boy discovered that there was neither allowance nor pension coming to him, so he announced that he intended to go on to Toronto.

'Anyway," he said, "if I can't do it now, I'm going to be a soldier later on."

Peter announced last night that he had friends in Toronto whom he could join. He figured that he could get there inside his $5, traveling half fare, and still have a few cents left over, and he took the night train for that city, deciding to sit up all night, with a good package of provisions supplied by friends.

The Manitoba General Election

Mayor of Brandon, a Liberal, Supports Sir James Aikins Conservative Leader

Mayor Cater, of Brandon, spoke at Sir James Aitkins' meeting at Winnipeg. He declared that although himself a Liberal he tendered no apology for supporting Sir James because of the services the former member for Brandon had rendered in parliament. W. H. Sharpe, M.P., Lisgar said the Conservative party in Manitoba had nothing to be ashamed of, but the old party and its leaders were dead and the Conservatives through affliction had come to better things. He referred to the Perdue Commission, saying "everybody feels that the finding of the Perdue Commission was not in accordance with the evidence at all."

Hon. T. H. Johnson, Minister of Public Works, spoke at Portage la Prairie last night. He referred to the report of J H. G. Russell, the architect appointed by the Government to investigate the Parliament buildings matter by making a valuation of the work actually done. Mr. Johnson had announc the gist of this report at a meeting held at noon today at the C.P.R. shops.

Others meetings took place throughout the province, but generally speaking nothing of unusual interest developed. To-morrow night the Liberals hold a mass meeting in the Walker theatre, when Mrs. McClung will be one of the speakers.

Mr. John Esmonde, son of the late member, has been returned as Parliamentary representative of North Tipperary.

The McCurdy Aviation School is considering a proposal to transfer its school to Victoria, B.C., for winter training. Bermuda has also been suggested. There are now 120 students on the roll.

Give Preference To The Soldiers

TORONTO, Aug. 6.—At a meeting of the executive of the Toronto Recruiting League today it was recommended that the Dominion and Provincial Governments and all municipal corporations make an immediate regulation that returned soldiers will have prior claim for employment over those who could have enlisted but did not do so. Also that employers be urged to announce that their employes returning from active service would be re-engaged.

How Thin People Can Put on Flesh

A New Discovery

Thin men and women—that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and funny sawdust diets. Omit the flesh cream rub-ons. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of those a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay there" fat should be the net result. Sargol charges your weak, stagnant blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—gives the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food and prepares it for the blood in easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 25 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a scientific combination of six of the best flesh-producing elements known to chemistry. They come 40 tablets to a package, are pleasant harmless and inexpensive, and J. S. McKeown, and all other druggists in Belleville and vicinity sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Capt. R. T. Hall, of the Second Dragoons of Brantford, received orders from Toronto headquarters to report on Thursday of this week at Niagara camp to take up his duties of captain and company commander of the 75th Battalion.

"I have only come about your dress, Mrs. Trimmings," returned Phillis, in a very small voice; and then she tried not to laugh, as Mrs. Trimmings regarded her with a broad stare of astonishment, which took her in comprehensively hat, dress and neat dogskin gloves.

"You might have taken up my pen and knocked me down with it," was Mrs. Trimming's graphic description of her feelings afterwards, as she carved a remarkably fine loin of veal, with a knickle of ham and some kidney-beans to go with it. "There was the colonel standing by the desk, Andrew; and he turned right round and looked at us both. 'I've come about your dress, Mrs. Trimmings,' she said, as pertlike as possible. Law, I thought I should have dropped, I was that taken aback."

Phillis's feelings were none of the pleasantest when Colonel Middleton turned round and looked at her. There was an expression almost of sorrow in the old man's eyes, as he so regarded her, which made her feel hot and uncomfortable. It was a relief when Mrs. Trimmings roused from her stupefaction and bustled out of the desk.

"This way, miss," she said, with a jerk of her comely head. But her tone changed a little, and became at once sharp and familiar. "I hope you understand your business, for I never could abide waste; and the way Miss Slasher cut into that gray merino—and it only just meets, so to say—and the breadths are as scanty as possible; and it would go to my heart to have a beautiful piece of silk spoiled, five-and-sixpence a yard, and not a flaw in it."

"If I thought I should spoil your dress I would not undertake it," returned Phillis, gently. She felt she must keep herself perfectly quiet with this sort of people. "My sister and I have just made up some very pretty silk and cashmere costumes, and they fitted as perfectly as possible."

"Oh, indeed!" observed Mrs. Trimmings, in a patronizing tone. She had no idea that the costumes of which Phillis spoke had been worn by the young dressmakers at one of Lady Fitzroy's afternoon parties. She was not quite at her ease with Phillis; she thought her a little high-and-mighty in her manner. "An uppish young person," as she said afterwards; "but her grand airs made no sort of difference to me, I can assure you."

There was no holding pins or picking up scissors in this case. On the contrary, Mrs. Trimmings watched with a vigilant eye, and was ready to pounce on Phillis at the least mistake or oversight, seeing which Phillis grew more offhand every moment. There was a great deal of haggling over the cut of the sleeve and arrangement of the drapery. "If you wil kindly leave it to me," Phillis said once; but nothing was further from Mrs. Trimming's intention. She had not a silk dress every day. And she had always been accustomed to settle all these points herself, while Miss Slasher had stood by humbly turning over the pages of her fashion-books, and calling her, at every sentence, "Ma'm," a word that Phillis's lips had not yet uttered. Philli's patience was almost tired out, when she was at last allowed to depart, with a large brown paper parcel under her arm. Mrs. Trimmings would have wrapped it up in newspaper, but Phillis had so curtly refused to have any thing but brown paper that her manner rather overawed the woman.

Poor Philis! Yes, it had really come to pass, and here she was actually walking through Hadleigh in the busiest time of the day, with a large, ugly-looking parcel and a little black bag! She had thought of sending Dorothy for the dress, but she knew what a trial it would have been to the old woman to see one of her young ladies reduced to this, and she preferred ladening herself to hurting the poor old creature's feelings. So she walked out bravely in her best style. But nevertheless her shapely neck would turn itself now and then from side to side, as though in dread of some familiar face. And there were little pin-pricks all over her of irritation and mortified self-love. "A thing is all very well in theory, but it may be tough in practice," she said to herself. And she felt an irresistible desire to return the offending dress to the odious Trimmings and tell her she would have nothing to do with her—"a disagreeable old cat," I am afraid Philis called her, for one is not always charitable and civil-spoken in one's thoughts.

"We are going the same way. May I carry that formidable-looking parcel for you?" asked a voice that was certainly becoming very familiar.

Poor Phillis started and blushed; but she looked more annoyed than pleased at the recontre.

"Mr. Drummond, are you omnipresent?—one is forever encountering you!" she said, quite pettishly; but, when Archie only laughed, and tried to obtain possession of the parcel, she resisted, and would have none of his assistance.

"Oh, dear, no!" she said; "I could not think of such a thing! Fancy the vicar of Hadleigh condescending to carry home Mrs. Trimming's dress!"

"Mrs. Trimmings' dress?" repeated Mr. Drummond, in a rapid crescendo. "Oh, Miss Challoner! I declare this beats everything!"

Phillis threw him a glance. She meant it to be cool, but she could not keep the sadness out of her eyes; they so contradicted the assumed lightness of her words:

"Miss Milner was far more considerate; she made Joseph carry hers to the Friary when he left your papers. Was he not a benevolent Joseph? Mrs. Trimmings wanted to wrap up her silk in newspaper; but I said to myself, 'One must draw the line somewhere;' and so I held out for brown paper. Do you think you could have offered to carry a parcel in newspaper, Mr. Drummond? Oh, by the bye, how can you condescend to walk with a dressmaker? But this is a quiet road, and no one will see you."

"Pardon me if I contradict you, but there is Colonel Midleton looking over his garden palings this moment," returned Mr. Drummond, who had just become painfully aware of the fact."

"Don't you think you had better go and speak to him, then? for you see I am in no need of help," retorted Phillis, who was sore all over, and wanted to get rid of him, and yet would have been offended if he had taken her at her word. But Mr. Drummond, who felt his position an uncomfortable one, and was dreadfully afraid of the colonel's banter, was not mean enough eto take advantage of her dismissal. He had joined himself to her company out of pure good nature, for it was a hot day and the parcel was heavy, but she would have none of his assistance.

So he only waved his hand to his friend, who took off his old felt hat very solemnly in return, and watched them with a grieved expression until they were out of sight.

"Now I will bid you good-bye," he said, when they had reached the vicarage.

Phillis said nothing; but she held out her hand, and there was a certain brightness in her eyes that showed she was pleased.

"He is a gentleman, every inch of him; and I won't quarrel with him any more,' she thought, as she walked up to the Friary. "Oh, how nice it would have been if we were still at Glen Cotage and he could see us at our best, and we were able to entertain him in our old fashion! How Carrie and the other girls would have liked him! and how jealous Dick would have been! for he never liked our bringing strange young men to the house, and always found fault with them if he could." And here Phillis sighed, and for the moment Mrs. Trimmings was forgotten.

Patriotism the Dominant Note

All Exhibitors Must Dress Their Booths With British or Canadian Flags

"This will be 'Patriotic Year' at the Canadian National Exhibition, and our directors desire that all exhibitors will endeavor to give effect to the patriotic idea in the decoration of their booths."

This is a paragraph taken from a circular sent out by the Exhibition officials to all exhibitors, and is in keeping with the general plan laid out for the year.

The idea is to make the whole Exhibition a lesson in loyalty and Empire patriotism, and every exhibitor who gets space will be required to have a British flag or Union Jack prominently displayed. The Fair at Toronto this year will be one grand patriotic picture.

The curfew bell is to be discontinued at Brockville.

A Deathbed Triumph

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

An old man lay on the bed of death. A doctor sat by him intent upon some method of saving his life. An entirely different problem was in the mind of the sufferer.

"Doctor," he said presently, "can't I die for a short time, then come to life again for a certain purpose?"

"What purpose?" asked the doctor.

The invalid cast his eyes about the room to see that no one was present, then, stretching forth his hand, drew the doctor to him and whispered what he had to say. When he came to a pause the doctor said:

"I have suspected as much."

"Can it be done?" asked the invalid.

"It can be tried."

Some more conversation followed, in which the doctor gave the sick man instructions, and the sick man did the same by the doctor. Then the latter ended the matter by saying:

"Are you ready?"

"Yes."

The doctor took from his medicine case a tablet and placed it in the patient's mouth.

The sick man, who was lying on his back, stared at the ceiling, immovable. The doctor went hurriedly to the door and opened it. There stood the wife of the invalid.

"Madam," said the doctor, "I fear that your husband is dead."

The woman hurried into the room and stood over the sickbed for a few moments looking down into the pale face. The doctor, who was beside her, closed the eyes of her husband, then led her away, saying:

"This has been a long trial to you. Your watch is now over. Go and rest yourself."

She suffered herself to be led away and within an hour was in bed and asleep.

Paul Markham passed away at dawn the next morning. Preparations were made for the funeral, which was held three days later, and on the fourth day his widow, who was his second wife, and her two children by a former husband, all dressed in deep mourning, entered the drawing room of the house in which Mr. Markham had died and took seats. A number of other persons, including a lawyer, entered, and when all were seated the attorney unfolded a document and was about to begin its reading when Dr. Blanchard, who had attended the deceased, entered in company with a girl of fifteen. There was about her a melancholy that savored of despair.

"I have here," said the lawyer, "the last will and testament of Paul Markham, deceased, executed one year ago."

He then read the will, which left all his property to his beloved wife, Jane Markham, trusting that she would sufficiently provide for his daughter, Ethel Markham. Having stated that the will had been duly signed and witnessed, he added that it would be immediately filed for probate. He was refolding the document when Dr. Blanchard arose and, drawing a paper from his pocket, said:

"I have a will executed a few hours before Paul Markham's death."

The widow's countenance changed immediately.

"If you have any such will," she said, "it is a forgery. At any rate it was not witnessed. That I know, because I was in attendance upon my husband every day and hour during his last illness, and I know no one who could have witnessed a will entered the house."

"What time did you go to bed the night your husband died?" asked the doctor.

"At 10 o'clock."

"Your husband did not die till 2 o'clock the next morning."

"He died at 9 o'clock in the evening. You called me into the room where he lay and told me he was dead."

"I told you I feared he was dead. He was very low. He revived, and at midnight I drew this simple will for him, bequeathing all his property to his daughter, Ethel Markham. Two persons came at my call and witnessed the will while you were asleep."

The woman stared at the doctor, although she could hardly believe her senses. For years she had dominated her husband and for a year, since, she had forced him to make a will in her favor, had watched him carefully to make sure that he did not make another. At the very end of his life he had outwitted her.

"Let me see it," she said to the doctor.

He held the paper before her. She read it and recognized her husband's signature, though it had been written in the agony of death. Realizing that she had been foiled, she arose from her seat and, followed by her two children, stalked out of the room.

Dr. Blanchard by the terms of the deathbed will was made Ethel's guardian, and she thereafter made her residence with him. Her life had been nearly crushed out of her by her stepmother, and it required some time to restore her to a healthy state of mind and body. But by the time she came of age she was completely recovered, for her surroundings as a member of the doctor's family were all that could be desired, and he knew how to treat her to her advantage professionally. In his old age his savings of years were swept away in a commercial panic, and Ethel Markham provided for him and those of his family who were still too young to take care of themselves.

Mrs. Kate Masterton, magazine writer and newspaper correspondent, was taken to Bellevue, New York, alleged to be insane.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tables will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medical Co., Brockville, Ont.

Machinists will hold a mass meeting at the Toronto Labor Temple on Sunday when reports will be received from the various factories on the men's working conditions. One grievance concerns overtime wage rate.

How You May Reduce Your Weight

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

During the next few weeks several thousand chick pheasants, hatched at the Jefferson Game Farm, N.Y., will be shipped to different parts of the country. Between 3,000 and 4,000 more will be desposed of before fall.

CONSTIPATIENTS

Read This—

It must be remembered that the bowels should move freely once a day to ensure perfect health. When such is not the case the poisonous waste material is absorbed into the system, thus producing a self blood poisoning.

The causes of Constipation are many and varied. Among the more common may be mentioned poor stomach digestion, a deficiency of bile in the intestines, a lack of secretion in the bowels, and a want of the natural muscular contraction of the intestines from above downward.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, sold everywhere at 25c and 60c, stimulates and restores the stomach digestion, increases the flow of bile into the intestine, causes a flow from the intestinal glands, and restores the natural downward action of the intestines, rendering it easy to secure a free action of the bowels, which is one of the most important requisites to health. 1

HORSE DROWNED IN TWO FEET OF WATER

Strange Accident Occurred at Lachine—Animal Had Tube Inserted in Windpipe

Largely due to the fact that a veterinary surgeon had inserted a small tube into its windpipe while the animal was suffering from some disease or ailment of the throat, a horse belonging to A. Roussille, of 127 Sixth Avenue, Lachine, was drowned in about two feet of water in Lake St. Louis yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Roussille, who is a contractor, was driving the horse attached to a dump cart, and guided the animal to the lake for water. On reaching a spot where the water was about two feet deep, the horse stumbled and fell. The driver endeavored to get the harness off the horse so that it could regain its feet. This he was unable to do and he then attempted to raise the horse's head above the water and hold it so until some of the people who were on the shore of the lake could render him assistance.

In the meantime the water was entering the windpipe through this tube which had been placed in the animal's neck to give it more air, as there was a growth in the throat, and the horse was drowned before the spectators realized that the matter was sufficiently serious to call for any assistance from them.

At a meeting of the Royal Dublin Society it was decided not to hold the annual Horse Show or the Winter Show in Dublin this year.

A fierce fire occurred in the drug store of Mr. Gibson, Belfast. Sheets of flaming oil spread rapidly over the street and a strong force of police was necessary to keep the crowds from

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

The 59th Battalion undertook a route march yesterday, which covered in all about 18 miles. The battalion left the camp in the morning at nine o'clock and marched to Lamoine's Point, a distance of nine miles. The battalion arrived at the Point at 12.30 after breaking the march with frequent periods of short rest. At the Point the men spent the time in swimming, and having a good time in general. Dinner was served at 1.30, and this was cooked in three field kitchens which the battalion carried with them. One of these has been presented to the 59th and the other two were loaned for demonstration purposes. The men declared that they were given the best meal yesterday they have had since they enlisted. The battalion started back for camp at 3.00 o'clock, and reached their lines 6.20 p.m., very few of the battalion being any the worse for the long tramp. A few suffered from blistered feet, but the most of them stood the march well, and fully enjoyed the change from the every day work of camp drills. Only three officers were mounted, the rest walking with the men. Lt.-Col. Dawson was pleased with the march, and will arrange for more of this work for his battalion.

Colonel Hemming stated yesterday that three new batteries of artillery will be organized at once in this division and will be brought to Barriefield camp for training. The new batteries have already been numbered the 32nd, 33rd and 34th field batteries, and recruiting for these will begin at once. The mobilization of three new batteries will make quite an addition to the camp, and when the season for retaining the troops in camp is over, the probabilites are that the batteries will be quartered here until they are sent overseas. This will mean about 600 more men for camp and about 300 horses.

WITHOUT LIGHT

The police last night detected an auto which was being driven without the rear light being lit. The result will be a police court case.

A HORSE THIEF

A man named Clark, riding horseback, pulled rein at the home of Peter Lusk and wanted to trade horses. He claimed the horse was his own, that he had got it on wages. A bargain was struck for a dollar difference in his favor. On Thursday night Constable Vankoughnet of Napanee in company with Chief Molyneaux located Clark at Lusk's' and arrested him, bringing him to Tweed. It seems that Clark had appropriated the horse to his own use without the knowledge and consent of its owner. The horse sent to Marlbank next morning where the owner met it and the prisoner was taken to Napanee. Vankoughnet said that was the second horse thief he had taken that day.

A DESERTER

The only occupant of the police cell last night was a deserter from the military camp at Barriefield, who was apprehended in the city.

ANXIETY TO ENLIST C ST HIM HIS LIFE

TORONTO, Aug. 6.—In order that he might be allowed to accompany the Mississauga Horse to the front, Harry R. Seale, of Gamble avenue, Todmorden, underwent an operation for varicose vein. The operation proved fatal and yesterday his remains were laid to rest. The man left his position in the Don Valley Brick Works to answer the call of his country. He enlisted and was passed medically, except for the varicose vein. To overcome this obstacle he went into St. Michael's Hospital but passed away following the operation. He is survived by the widow and three small children, the oldest of whom is twelve years old, who are almost penniless.

A subscription was taken up at the on Valley Brick Works among his late fellow employes and the sum of $50 was collected. Rev. A. A. Bryant, rector of St. Andrew's church, conducted the funeral service.

GERMAN MOTHER'S LETTER

Picked up in a Trench by a Canadian Soldier

BERLIN, Ont., Aug. 6.—An interesting letter was received in the city to-day from Pte. George Magnus, formerly of Elora, who is with the first Canadian Expeditionary Force, which had been picked up in a captured German trench and apparently had been left behind by a German soldier. It had been sent by the mother of a German soldier, and after some personal references in which the hope is expressed that God will soon bring peace, the writer said that she had sent her son several packages, and added: "I would gladly have sent you cake, but there is no flour. It has all been seized. It has been figured to a man how much corn, potatoes and meat each one receives. We have received bread tickets, half a pound of bread per day for one person, and it is so poor that I cannot eat it. No corn bread is given to us, and when our money is gone then there is nothing more, so that it is hardship for us old people. But we must thank God. It is war time, and we thank God that we live so quietly here. We are not yet in danger as you poor soldiers are. How many tears have doubtless fallen?" The letter was written in German and was translated here.

ITALIAN ARTILLERY ROUTS THE ENEMY

Mountain Artillery at Height of 10,000 Feet Disperses the Enemy—Monte San Michele, Five Miles from Gorizia taken After Desperate Fight

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, Aug. 9.—An official statement given out by the Italian general headquarters says: In the Tonale Pass zone our Alpine detachments on Saturday morning surprised and dispersed the enemy's troops entrenched south-east of the peak of Ercavallo, who were driven from their positions by our mountain artillery, which had been hoisted to a height of more than ten thousand feet on the Crag of Ercavallo.

In the valley of Sexten, in Cadore, after careful preparation by our artillery during the past few days, our infantry forced the enemy back from Montenro as far as the southern slopes of Burgdall, where they have been reinforced.

On the Carso plateau frequent but weak attacks by the enemy on Saturday were promptly repulsed.

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Italy will send 650,000 fresh troops either to France or the Dardanelles within the next three weeks, according to Captain Franctis, of the Italian, who arrived here today. "There were 500,000 troops in Turin when I left," he said, "and 150,000 more in Taranto; and 150 or 200 large transports were ready to convey the troops where they are most needed."

HOLD KEY TO GORIZIA

ROME, Aug. 8.—After a desperate battle the Italians have stormed and captured the summit of Monte San Michele, which dominates Goriza.

The occupation of Monte San Michele, 900 feet high, five miles south-west of Goriza, two and one-half miles east of Gradisca, and three miles north and a little west of Monfalcone, renders the Italian possession of the last two places secure and at the same times gives the invaders a position from which they can command the ridge north of the highway which runs from Gorizia sout-west of Aidussina, and thence due south to Trieste, Joining the Gorizia-Trieste Railway at Cobila. Behind the ridge the Austrians still hold the slopes of Mont Frigado, 5 500 feet, and Mont Gollak, 5,800 feet, whose summits are inaccessible.

Belleville, Its Beginning and Early History

Part 9.—By Maurice D. Lynch (from Chicago-Belleville News).

The population of Belleville had reached 11,120 by the year 1876 and the people clamored for a street railway. They rightly believed that no town of that size should be without one.

Usually, when there is a genuine demand for accommodation of any sort some one always seems willing to provide it. I believe it was Messrs. Marsh who consented to be "the goat" in providing Belleville with a street car line, and in 1876 the Council granted a charter to the Belleville Street Railway Company and the line was built. It was very popular for awhile. In those days the old folks used to promise the kids that if they were good they would treat them to an excursion on the street railway.

The road started just a little east of Cooper's Hotel, near the Grand Trunk Station, where the car barns were located, and it ran down to the wharf via the Station Road, Mill Street and Front Street. I believe I have the names of the streets right. Anyway, it went past Jim Meagher's store, McGinnis' grocery, Burrell's axe factory, Brown's foundry and all those other grand old points of interest.

But to get back to the promises of the old folks to take the kids riding on the street car. Whenever this happened the family would walk to either end of the line, so they'd be sure to get their nickel's worth. You can see from this what a fine fat chance the street railway had to make money. Well, it didn't make money, and it changed hands so often that it would be hard work to tell exactly who all did own it at one time or another. A popular "guessing game" in the early eighties was "Guess who owns the street railway this week."

The railway was a single track affair, with, if I remember right, four switching places where cars would wait for cars coming in the opposite direction to pass. Those switch tracks caused so much profanity that the Recording Angel had to put an extra clerk or two on the "Cuss ledger," for you'd have to wait anywhere from five or ten minutes to an hour for the oncoming car. The length of time you waited was governed entirely by how big a hurry you were in. If you didn't care when you got down-town you would often find that the other car would be along in five minutes, but if you were in a very great hurry, then the idea was to get off and walk.

Some of the drivers were enterprising and accommodating, however, and if you stood in with them they would not bother waiting for the other car to switch, but would go blithely on their way and when they met the other car they would simply pull their own car off the track and around the other one and get it back on the track again and be on their way once more. This may seem like an exaggeration, but it is not.

The Belleville Street Railway may not have been much of a road to travel on, but it was the most accommodating line that ever flourished. I have done a lot of travelling in my day and have seen many forms of transportation in many places, but never have I known any public service corporation fit to be mentioned when you are talking about accommodation. We've all heard of "accommodation trains" on steam railways. These usually "accommodate" you by making you get up in the middle of the night to catch them. But the accommodation of the Belleville Street Railway was a different breed of a dog. For instance, the car would stand outside a store while you went in to make a purchase, or it would wait outside of a hotel bar while you went in to ask the bartender for a match. If a woman hailed the driver from her window and signified that she wanted to take the car down-town, the driver would wait while she dressed herself, and would even give her time to put the last little dab of powder on her nose to "take the shine off," or he would wait while she went in next door and left the baby in care of the neighbor.

In the winter the cars had straw piled on the floor to keep your feet warm and had little dinky, smoky stoves that made a weak bluff at keeping you warm, but which in reality only succeeded in accentuating the icy cold of the car.

However, I've nothing but kindly memories of the old Belleville Street Railway. It was the only railway in the world that ever extended to me an "annual pass." This privilege, which I enjoyed for several years, would have been more valuable, of course, if the cars had happened oftener to be going in the same direction I was.

Cost to Dominion Of a Year of War

Nearly $90,000,000 Has Been Well Spent in Twelve Months Struggle

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—A year of war has cost Canada $90,000,000. The great struggle in which many Canadians have already laid down their lives is also calling for great financial sacrifices. It is costing Canada, in fact, $300,000 a day. Figuring this out even more finely, it will be apparent that Canadians are going down into their pockets to pay the expenses of the present struggle at the rate of nearly $15,000 an hour, or about $240 a minute, and the statistician who cares to reduce his calculations to the ultimate unit will discover, of course, that the Canadian financial war clock is ticking at the rate of only a little less than $4 per second.

The total war expenditure up to July 31, or practically twelve months after war was declared on August 4th last year, was $81,500,000. The ratio of expense, of course, is going up all the time as the Dominion places more and more troops in the field. Almost the whole expenditure is military in character. Canada's navy, especially now that German cruisers have been driven from the sea, costing her comparatively very little. The main items are in the equipment and upkeep of men at home, in England and at the front. The pay of the troops alone costs little less than $100,000 a day.

Of the $90,000,000 which constitutes the total expense of the war so far, $50,000,000 was voted at the special August session of Parliament last year and $40,000,000 came out of the war appropriation of $100,000,000 made at the last session, and which is being borrowed in England. Besides providing for the direct war expenditures, the Minister of Finance had to increase the revenues, which were falling as a result of the war, and for that purpose imposed extra tariff and direct taxation. That this will be sufficient to take care of the financial situation till the next session is now being demonstrated, Customs revenues during the past few months having largely increased.

BRITISH CAPTAIN FIGHTS AND DIES AS PRIVATE

Strange Incident of Loyalty Relalep by the British Press Bureau

LONDON, Aug. 6.—How a Captain of the British army in India left his regiment there and, under an assumed name, joined the British expeditionary force in France as a private, and as a private died bravely in battle, is the strange incident related in an official statement given out to-day by the British Press Bureau.

The Captain was H. S. Smart of the 53rd Sikhs. On June 4 his removal from the service was chronicled in The Official Gazette, it being for his unexplained absence from India. The statement issued to-day says:

"Since it has been ascertained that his action was due to his strong desire to join the force in France. He came to this country and enlisted as Thomas Hardy in the Royal West Surrey Regiment, and serving as a private, he was killed in action May 17 at Festubert, where he displayed such gallantry that he would have been granted the medal for distinguished conduct had he survived."

Because of these circumstances, Smart, though dead, has been restored to his Captaincy.

Turkish Vessel Sunk by Allies

(Canadian Press Special)

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 9.—The Turkish battleship Kheyr-Ed-Din Barbarossa, of 9,900 tons, formerly the German warship Kurfurst Friedrich Wilhelm, has been sunk by a submarine of the Entente powers according to an official announcement issued today by the Turkish Government. The majority of the officers and men of the crew were saved.

English Language To Replace German

(Canadian Press Special)

PETROGRAD, Aug. 9.—At the request of the school authorities, the Minister of Finance of Russia has ordered that the English language shall replace German in most commercial schools of Russia as one of the compulsory subjects.

CANADIANS DRINKING AND SMOKING LESS

Large Decrease in Use of Spirits, Cigars, Cigarettes—First Drop for Years

OTTAWA, Aug. 7—The national thrift engendered of the war and the scarcity of spending money coupled with the increased excise taxes, have combined to make Canadians smoke and drink less. The figures of the Inland Revenue Department as to the national consumption of liquor and tobacco for the last fiscal year show a considerable drop from the preceding year. There were nearly 800,000 fewer gallons of spirits drunk and forty-eight million fewer cigars and twenty-seven million fewer cigarettes smoked than during the preceding year. This marks the first slackening in the growth of men's expensive habits for some years in Canada. The last decrease in the national consumption of liquors and tobaccos synchronized with the financial depression of nearly twenty years ago. Since then the nation's drink and tobacco bill has been steadily mounting.

Congo Captured By the French

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 9.—An official statement issued by the Minister for the Colonies says the French operations against the Germans in West Africa have been meeting with great success. The capture of Bitam on July 17th completed the conquest of that part of the Congo territory ceded to Germany four years ago. On July 23rd, the French in the eastern part of Kamerun took Moopa and four days later Mombia, and forced the Germans to evacuate Gadji.

CONSCRIPTION THOUGHT TO BE CONTEMPLATED

Unusual Activity in Cabinet Circles London Starts Rumor

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Lord Kitchener conferred with Premier Asquith today for the third time in four days. The War Secretary has also held conferences with several other Ministers of the coalition Cabinet, and a report is in circulation that as a result of his efforts the Cabinet has practically decided upon a policy of conscription.

No official announcement has yet been made, and it is possible that none will come before Parliament reconvenes on September 14, but if by that time the Germans have not been checked in the eastern theatre of war, it is probable conscription will be deemed necessary.

Some members of the Cabinet are said to oppose conscription in any form, but Lord Kitchener is reported to have gained the support of the most influential Ministers.

Offer of Peace Made by Germany

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8.—Special—There is good reason to believe that within the past week the Kaiser has proposed peace to Russia. The Bourse Gazette says that an overture has been made to the Czar through the King of Denmark. Needless to say, Russia emphatically declined to consider the offer.

To this failure of the German military power to envelop Russia's Vistula armies there has been added, therefore, the failure of her diplomacy to detach Russia from the allies.

SWEDISH STEAMER SUNK

(Canadian Press Special)

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 9—The Swedish steamer Mai has been sunk by a German submarine. One of her boats, containing seven men and a woman, has been picked up and landed here. The second boat, carrying the captain and nine men, is missing.

Canada to Have 40,000 in Field

Full Army Corps Soon Will be Maintained on Flanders Front

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—That Canada will have a full army corps in the field to be commanded by General Alderson, with Generals Currie and Turner in charge of the two divisions composing it, is the understanding in British military circles, according to the statement to-day of Hon. Col. McBain, who was in Ottawa after his return from the other side on official business.

It is understood that the first division, which is still in France in a depleted condition after the St. Julien and Festubert fighting, will be brought up to a strength by reinforcements, and with the second division, which is still in England, will form an army corps which is to take the field during the coming Autumn. The reinforcements necessary to keep an army corps of 40,000 men up to strength will be heavy, and explain the urgent present call for more recruits.

According to Col. McBain, the allies are making thorough preparations to meet and repel another German offensive in the west, where it is expected very shortly.

That the Zeppelin menace has been exploded and that the submarine peril was if anything less of a danger than when the paper blockade was inaugurated, was Col. McBain's statement. The British navy was generally understood to be making good progress on the undersea boats, he said, and it was currently reported that up to date fourteen of them had been damaged.

Lieut. Turpin Home at Cobourg

The best designs of men "gang aft aglee," as Lieut. Turpin found upon his arival at Cobourg shortly after 3 o'clock Sunday morning. He had thought to slip in quietly at night with no fuss or ado, but presto, there were the Mayor, the Citizens Band, the members of the Cobourg Heavy Battery, other military men, citizens of all callings and professions, boys and girls, in fact a good part of the town's population waiting to welcome him. On behalf of the Corporation of Cobourg, Mayor Duncan extended greetings, a procession was formed and Lieut. Turpin was driven in a carriage with the band merrily playing, down Division street, up King to Ball and to his home. It was a happy home-coming and Lieut. Turpin was a happy man as he stood on his own verandah with his loved ones around him.

Lieut. Turpin was with the transport service at the front. His eyes have given him considerable trouble, and he has been off duty for some few weeks. He is home on leave and expects to return the last of the month.—Cobourg World.

Hamilton Women Collect Pillows

Over 5,000 Collected for Red Cross Ship to the Front

HAMILTON, Aug. 7—The appeal for pillows made by the ladies of the Candian Red Cross of this city met with a gratifying response. All day long drays have been collecting the donations, and it is estimated that tonight over 5,000 pillows are piled up ready for shipment overseas. Many of these pillows were equipped with real lace-worked slips. This material will be removed and sold for other Red Cross purposes. The committee in charge is delighted with the result of the work.

OFFICIAL OF COMMONS GOING TO THE FRONT

OTTAWA, Aug. 7.—Captain Bowie, who for many years has been assistant sergeant-at-arms in the House of Commons, has joined the 77th Battalion here for overseas service. Capt. Bowie has been for a long time an officer in the Governor-General's Footguards, but previous to the war was on the reserve. On the outbreak of war he rejoined his old regiment, and assisted in refilling the Guards as each draft went out for overseas service.

Captain Bowie is well known to Parliamentarians all over the country during the years he has been engaged on the staff of the House of Commons.

GERMANY LOOKS EAST FOR SETTLEMENT OF WAR

Russian Forces Struggling to Shake Themselves Free of German Grip—Determined Efforts to Entrap Russian Armies

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Mile by mile the Austro-Germans are pushing the Russians back from their old fighting ground about Warsaw, meanwhile making determined efforts to entrap or crush the armies of Grand Duke Nicholas before they have a chance to secure their retreat to their new defensive position. Very successful operations to this end are reported by Vienna, where the claim is made that Archduke Ferdinand's army has forced the Russians in disorder across the Vieprz River, near Lubartov.

A military observer here expresses the opinion that the entrapping attempts will fail. Russia having rejected what in England is regarded as a bona fide peace proposal made by Germany, there is indication of an immediate general offensive by either side. The struggle of the Russian forces to shake themselves free of the German grip remains the chief factor in the war news, with added interest In the Dardanelles operations. Never before has the importance of these operations been more keenly realized in Britain and France.

It is increasingly manifest that Germany looks to the East for a settlement of the war. By overrunning Serbia she would occupy a very favorable strategic position to invoke Bulgaria's passive or active aid in reaching Constantinople along the main line. Expectation of such a move has doubtless brought about the renewed negotiations between Bulgaria and the Entente Allies.

GERMANS OCCUPY PRAGA.

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Aug. 9.—A German official statement says the Germans have occupied Praga, a suburb of Warsaw, on the east bank of the Vistula.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The morning newspapers look upon the Russian situation more optimistically than they havs for several days.

Enters Lions Den Gets Two Recruits

British V. C. Proves His Courage in a Different Way

FISHGUARD, Eng., July 22.—(By Mail).—Sergeant Fuller, who recently won the Victoria Cross in Flanders and has since been assisting in the recruiting campainn in England, won two recruits here by entering a lion's den.

Fuller was speaking at an open-air meeting in a vacant lot adjoining a small menagerie, when two young men in the outskirts of the audience jestingly remarked to him: "We'll join if you are brave enough to enter that lion's cage unarmed."

"I'll just take you at your word," returned Fuller without a moment's hesitation. "Lions have no terror for anyone who has been in the front trenches in Flanders."

He strode over to the menagerie, obtained the permission of the proprietor, and entered the cage, where there were two lions. Amid tremendous excitement in the crowd, he calmly stroked the lions, for a moment or two and then walked out of the cage and resumed his place on the recruiting platform.

ALARMING STATEMENT BY CITY OFFICIAL

TORONTO, Aug. 7.—Two hundred prematurely born babies have been found in the city's sewers in the past two years, according to the statement of Works Commissioner Harris.

Mr. Harris says that 200 was probably a small estimate of the actual number, as it is only those that have been found in the screens at the sewage disposal plant. No estimate of those who have gone through can be made.

The discoveries have been reported to the Chief Coroner with a view to taking the matter up with the police. But this is considered useless, as there are no clues available. The sewage comes from all parts of the city and it would be impossible to ascertain where the bodies were deposited.

OBSTACLE ON TRACK DERAILED TWO CARS

Attempt to Wreck Train at Brantford Suspected

BRANTFORD, Aug. 7.—An attempt apparently was made this morning to wreck a T. H. and B. freight train two hundred yards east of Brantford depot. Two cars were derailed, the rails bent like wire and ties torn into splinters for a distance of seventy-five yds. The engine of the train in charge of Conductor Hobson, knocked over an obstacle on the track and it is believed that the obstacle fell into the frogging, derailing two cars after several had passed the danger point in safety. No person was injured. Seven cars of the same train fell over a hundred-foot embankment at Dundas on Wednesday on the easterly trip. A washout on the line caused by rain was responsible for the first accident.

Western Campaign

Heavy Night's Fighting in all Sections—French Repulse all German Attacks

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 9.—(Afternoon official statement). There was much going on last night in the Arras district. In the section to the north of Arras a German attack at a point north of the railroad station of Souchez was repulsed.

In the section of Neuville, east of the road to Lillie, the Germans, after exploding a mine, bombarded our positions violently, and endeavored to come out of their trenches. They were met by the fire of our infantry and artillery.

In the Argonne, not far from the road running from Vienna Lechaleau to Binarville, the enemy last night delivered an attack upon our advanced posts and trenches, making use of hand grenades and bombs. They were driven back to their lines by our fire.

In the western section of the forest which extends from Haute-Chevauchee to Vauquois there was fighting with bombs, hand grenades and rifles, which lasted half the night.

In the Vosges, fresh German attacks against our positions on the Linge were delivered at about one o'clock this morning, but resulted in complete failure. The curtain of fire maintained by our troops inflicted perceptible losses on the enemy.

RETURNS TO ENGLAND FOR COURT MARTIAL

KINGSTON, Aug. 7.—Pay-Sergt. Allan P. McGregor, charged with the theft of several thousand dollars from Major Britton, of the first contingent at Salisbury Plain, left under escort today for Montreal, whence he will be sent to England. McGregor has had a sensational experience since he left England last November.

He landed at New York and came from there to Brockville, where he was on New Year's Day. He left before the police could arrest him, and was rounded up a few weeks ago in Rochester, N.YY. He has been in Tete de Pont Barracks since his arrest and trip across the border. He is being taken back to England, where a general court-martial will be held, at which Major Britton, of Gananoque, O.C. of the battery of which he was a member, will give evidence.

An Idle Rumor

Unfounded Report That Lloyd George Had Been Killed

Last night we received a telegraphic message, through the Canadian Press, dated from New York, which said: "A report is in circulation here that Lloyd George has been killed." The news spread in Belleville and created some sensation.

We have received no confirmation of the story to-day, which must be put down to an idle rumor.

ADMIRES GREAT CANADIAN HOTEL

The Canadian Representative of one of the largest Publishing Houses on the American continent has written to Mr. Angus Gordon, Manager of the "Chateau Laurier," Ottawa, on the subject of Canadian hotels, as follows:—

"It happens to be the writer's work to play around the country," says this correspondent," and I will say frankly that I have never had any more enjoyable time or any more wonderful surroundings than I had at your "Chateau Laurier"."

Lawrence Barrett's Romeo.

Irving contributed to the gayety of a supper a story about Lawrence Barrett. One night Barrett and his old friend, Edwin Booth, met at their club in New York. Barrett, after a brief greeting, bustled toward the door with every appearance of remembering a pressing engagement.

"Halloa! Where are you off to?" Booth asked.

"To a rehearsal," said Barrett.

"What's the play?"

Barrett said it was "Romeo and Juliet."

"And what part do you take?" Booth asked in sudden access of interest.

"There is only one part for me in the play," Barrett said, drawing himself up in lofty indignation.

"Oh, ah, yes," said Booth; "I know—the nurse!"

The angered tragedian stood forth in haughty silence and did not speak to Booth for two days.—Strand Magazine.

The Caged Emperor.

After Elba Napoleon became a bogey to the whole world as well as to the British government, which had the guarding of him. "Lord Bathurst believed," says Norwood Young in "Napoleon In Exile: St. Helena (1815-1821)," "that Napoleon spent his time in concocting plans for escape." But, said the outlaw to O'Meara, "Where could I go to, allowing that I got out of the island? Every place I could arrive at I would find enemies to seize me." This panicky dread of Napoleon's escape from St. Helena led to England's annexation of the uninhabited island of Ascension, 700 miles distant. The even more distant island of Tristan d'Acunha was similarly taken possession of the following year, because it was thought to be too dangerously near the Napoleonic influence.

Thrifty Turks.

The Turk is invariably a brave man when he is in a subordinate capacity. Directly, however, he becomes one having authority he turns to peculation. There is a true story of a Turkish warship which had a wooden propeller shaft, her captain having sold the original shaft at scrap iron prices. There is also the story, equally true, of a battleship laid down many years ago which, when nearly ready for launching, had her construction suspended for lack of funds. A few years later the kaiser, in his capacity of the friend of Islam, having arranged a German loan, it was decided to complete the ship. But when they came to look for her no trace remained. Everything had been stolen.—London Mirror.

Mother's Constancy.

There is an enduring tenderness in the love of a mother for a son that transcends all other affections of the heart. It is neither to be chilled by selfishness nor daunted by danger nor weakened by worthlessness nor stifled by ingratitude. She will sacrifice every comfort to his convenience; she will surrender every pleasure to his enjoyment; she will glory in his fame and exult in his prosperity, and if misfortune overtakes him he will be the dearer to her through his misfortunes, and if disgrace settles upon his name she will still love and cherish him in spite of his disgrace, and if all the rest of the world casts him off she will be all the world to him.—New York Weekly.

Keeper and Convict

By JOHN Y. LARNED

Tommy Ruggles and Eddie Barnes were schoolmates. Not only were they schoolmates, but little chums. They left the grammar school and entered the high school at the same time. From the high school they went out into the world to fight the battle of life. Ruggles drifted into the political arena and after an election, during which he had done good work for his party, received the appointment of head of the state penitentiary.

Barnes became a merchant in a small way. He finally formed a partnership with a man who swindled him out of all he possessed. A quarrel ensued that ended in a scuffle, during which Barnes threw his opponent, whose head struck some hard substance, and his skull was fractured. He died, and Barnes was sent to the penitentiary to serve a term of ten years.

When Ruggles and Barnes met, after not having seen each other for several years—the one as keeper, the other as convict—both shed tears.

"Tom," said Barnes, "I'm sorry you are my jailer. I cannot serve out my term, and I am bound to try to escape. And I wish to say to you now that I expect you to do your duty by the state like an honorable man. You may kill me while trying to capture me when I try to escape."

"Don't try the escape game, Ed. It seldom, if ever, pays. And in this case it would be hard on us both. I should certainly do my duty, and you know where that duty would lie. To me you are only one of hundreds of prisoners for whom I am responsible."

Barnes made an effort to serve out his sentence without any attempt to escape. But one day an excellent opportunity offered itself. He was in the yard of the prison near a gateway, which was opened to admit a cart. A storm came up, and the gatekeeper was blinded by a cloud of dust and lightning. Barnes slipped out and ran like a deer.

He ran into a house not far from the prison, where he found a woman. It is difficult to repress sympathy with one hounded for his life or his liberty, and the woman furnished him with a suit of her husband's clothes, and Barnes persuaded her to give him a revolver. But Ruggles at the head of a force was after him, and the convict was seen leaving the house. He had a good start, and when they reached him he was on rising ground behind a stone wall ready to defend himself. Ruggles ordered his men to keep back, telling them that he would go forward and endeavor to persuade the prisoner to surrender. He walked forward till he heard Barnes call out:

"Don't come any farther, Tom. I'm desperate!"

"Give yourself up, Ed. I've got a dozen men down on the road. It will be suicide for you to resist, and to hurt you would be an awful thing for me."

"I can't go back to that life. I'd rather die."

There was a grim silence between them for a few moments; then Barnes added:

"Go back and send your men to take me. I don't want to hurt you, and I'm going to use up the six shots in my revolver."

"I wouldn't send my men where I can do all there is to be done. If any one is to be killed in your recapture I prefer that it should be myself."

"That's not right. I've got to die; you haven't. Don't shoot your old chum or compel him to shoot you. You'll give me a better chance for my life by sending one of your men, or all of them for that matter."

"You know I couldn't do that. I might as well resign my post and lose myself in another country. But it isn't my position that I'm thinking of; it's my honor. The state trusts me to carry out the will of the people, and I'm bound to do so. If you were my own brother or my own father I would be obliged to take you all the same."

"I see how it is, Tom. We're forced by fate into this position. If you'll agree to kill me I'll step out and give you a shot."

"No; you'll have to defend yourself. I must do my duty to the state, but I'm not the state executioner."

"Well, I won't be captured, and you won't accept my life. I don't see that there's anything to be done but for us to say 'Goodby.'"

"You'd better surrender, Ed. With time off for good behavior you'll only have about six years to serve."

"Six years of such life is far worse than death."

"If you won't surrender promise me that you'll defend yourself to the best of your ability; that you won't spare me. If you let me kill you you'll force me to live a life of regret that would be worse than your six years of imprisonment."

"I wish I could stand it to do the rest of the time. It would save you."

"Promise."

There was a delay, after which Barnes promised that he would try to bring himself to the scratch of firing on his old friend.

The men down in the road heard two shots; then all was silent. Rushing up the incline, they saw the keeper and the convict lying dead, clasping each other's hand. A trail of blood from where each had stood when he fired indicated that they had crawled to each other.

One weed which goes to seed is a guarantee of many in its place next year.

BELLEVILLE BOY SCORES

The Thirty-eighth Annual Convention of the National Electric Light Association was held in San Francisco last month. The association contains in its membership all the concerns which manufacture, distribute or supply electricity and its kindred accessories. The annual election of officers was held one day during the convention and who d'ye suppose was elected to the high office of president of the association? No one but your old Uncle Dudley. Mr. Edward W. Lloyd, an old Belleville boy who has been for many years general contract agent for the Commonwealth Edison Company of Chicago. You simply cannot keep the Belleville lads on the bottom, and the "News" is greatly pleased at learning that our old-time pal, Ed. Lloyd, has been given this signal honor by the national body of the electric world.—The Chicago-Belleville News.

SHOTS AT SUNSET

At the time a certain distinguished ex-war prisoner of Germany landed in Belleville last spring, we read of his landing with much interest. The most interesting feature of all the columns we read in the Belleville papers about the hero-martyr prisoner was this: "His two beautiful little daughters speak German fluently, although neither of them can speak English." Now, here was a lad who had been a teacher in Canada for many years, we presume born and raised in Canada, his wife a Canadian born and raised; the couple moved to Germany; they had two children, both of whom were taught to speak the language of a country (Germany) in which their parents were temporarily residing, but they were not taught a single word of their mother-tongue. It is our opinion, whether fair or unfair, that that professor was some patriotic Canadian, alright. Some guy, fellows, some hero, some martyr, some war prisoner!—The Chicago Belleville News.

Aeroplane Raids.

There is nothing that I know of more hideous than an aerial bombardment. It requires an entire mental readjustment. The sky, which has always symbolized peace, suddenly spells death. Bombardment by the big guns of an advancing army is not unexpected. There is time for flight, a chance, too, for a reprisal. But against these raiders of the sky there is nothing. One sits and waits, and no town is safe. One moment there is a peaceful village with war twenty, fifty miles away. The next minute hell breaks loose. Houses are destroyed, sleeping children die in their cradles, the streets echo and re-echo with the din of destruction. The reply of the anti air craft guns is feeble, and at night futile. There is no bustle of escape. The streets are empty and dead, and in each house people, family groups, noncombatants, folk who ask only the right to work and love and live, sit and wait with blanched faces.—Mary Roberts Rinehart in Saturday Evening Post.

Insure Pigs In Sweden.

Though it is commonly known that there is scarcely anything in the world that cannot be insured, the layman would probably hesitate before he hastened to Lloyd's to insure his pigs. In Sweden, however, no difficulties stand in his way. In fact, there are several competing companies all anxious to insure the lives of pigs belonging to the small farmer. But as yet the industry has not developed as much as it might, since out of the 700 Swedish institutions which insure live stock there are only forty which insure pigs. These societies are most numerous in the thickly populated districts, where they insure pigs only. The pigs insured [illegible] condition, and the agencies refuse to pay if the animals die in consequence of ill treatment or neglect.—Boston Transcript.

How to Treat a Fracture.

Be very careful with a single fracture to prevent it from becoming compound. The proper treatment is to pad and bandage the limb with splints and anything else which can be improvised, so as to hold it steadily in position until your injured man can be carried comfortably to the camp or nearest doctor. Don't get jolting him or handling him with anything but the greatest tenderness. If there are no chances of getting a doctor, cut all the clothing away from the injured limb, and when you have it bare get some one else to help you, if you can. Pull straight on the end of the injured limb farthest away from the body, and as gently and firmly as possible manipulate the broken bone into position. You will know when this is done by the shape of the limb.—Outing.

Business Advertising In 1748.

Judging from many advertisements in the early New York newspapers, the numbers of buildings were very little used. Business houses were usually designated by a characteristic sign or by the locality to other well known residents. An example of the latter is seen in the following from the New York Gazette of December, 1748 Smith's Fly was at the foot of Maiden Lane.

"Henry Hansen, who lately kept his store next Door to Mr. John Groesbeeck's, is now removed to Capt. Richard Langdon's, in Smith's Fly opposite to Col. De Peyster's, Treasurer, where he now keeps his Store. He has likewise imported in the last Ships from London, a fresh Assortment of European Goods."

A Mythical Lover

By MARTHA V. MONROE

My dear, you being my most intimate friend, I write you first of all to announce my engagement. Harry after hanging about me for two years has at last proposed. How much longer he would have continued to do so had I not by my own skillful manipulation brought him to terms I don't know. As it is, I had a hard time landing him and did so only after a number of efforts had failed.

Now, I wish to assure you, my dear, that if you have occasion to bring a man to terms, do not adopt any of the old fashioned methods that are well known—that is, if you are playing a man who is as adept at the game as you. I tried a number of them on Harry, and he was too smart for them all. First I told him that I was intending to study the law and would make a vow of celibacy that I might be wedded only to my professional work. He laughed me to scorn; drew ironical pictures of my arguing a case before a jury; said he would like to be the judge before whom I pleaded a case, and all that.

About the time of this first failure the European war broke out, and I threatened to go abroad and take care of sick and wounded soldiers. He said he was thinking of going to France and enlisting in the Foreign legion. I didn't go as a nurse, and he didn't go as a soldier. He had met my bluff with one of his own.

Then Howard Wentworth came to town, and of all the girls here he seemed to prefer me. Taking advantage of his preference, I encouraged him, especially in presence of Harry. What did the scamp do but devote himself to Agnes Woodruff. I was frightened for fear she would get him away from me and dropped Mr. Wentworth immediately. After I had done so Harry gradually ceased to pay marked attention to Agnes, but I knew that he was still more or less devoted to her, and it worried me.

Having heard that Aunt Caroline had been in her youth skillful at the game of hearts, I confessed my failures and my anxiety to her and asked her to help me.

"The trouble with your expedients," she said to me, "is that they are too palpable. One of those you have tried is excellent, but you did not apply it in the right way. I refer to your attempt to pique your lover by accepting the attentions of another man. You should not have called in the attentions of a real admirer, but an imaginary one."

Not understanding what Aunt Carrie meant, I asked her to explain. She did so and gave me the identical method by which she brought Uncle John to terms twenty years ago. I made up my mind to try it.

My first move was to nerve myself to treat Harry with indifference for a stated period. This being a part of a general plan, I was enabled to play the part pretty well. I was careful not to overact it, in order that he might not see through what I was up to. Having apparently grown more indifferent to him for three or four months, I accepted an invitation from Elinor Trask to make her a visit. I remained away six weeks, and when I came home I talked a great deal to my intimate girl friends about a fascinating fellow I had met, or, rather had not met, during my visit, giving them the impression that I had been much taken up with him. Of course they spread a report that I was either engaged or was likely to be engaged, and it reached Harry's ears.

Nevertheless so confident was he that he could drop me and take me up when he pleased that he placed but little confidence in my preference for him having been diverted to another channel. He came to see me on my return from my visit, twitted me on having lost my heart during my absence and asked for a description of this "Adonis," as he called my mythical lover, who had been so fortunate as to win such a prize as myself. I turned the conversation upon other topics. Harry asked me to go to the theater with him the next evening. I told him so decidedly that I had a previous engagement that he did not ask for another evening.

Harry did not call again for some time. Meanwhile I was talking to my chums about the fascinating man I had met, confident that what I said would reach the man I really loved. The next time he called on me I telephoned to a florist, with whom I had left an order for flowers to be filled on call, to send them at once. Half an hour later the flowers came and were brought into the room to me where I was sitting with Harry. Pretending to be anxious about them, I opened the box containing them. Inside was a little envelope. I seized it and without opening it held it in the palm of my hand.

This was altogether too much for Harry's equanimity. He demanded to see the card of the sender, and I refused to give it to him. He turned very red, then pale, and I saw that an emotional storm was raging within him. I let him go on till he had committed himself, after which he lost all interest as to who sent the flowers, for we were engaged.

I assure you, my dear, I am very happy, and Harry says he is very happy, and, as for my mythical lover, I think it is perfectly honorable for me to have used him, for he can't be a bit disappointed.

Present Blessings From Great War

The Second of a Series of Sermons By Rev. Chas. Geo. Smith, B.D.

In the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church Sunday evening a good congregation greeted the Pastor, Rev. Chas. Geo. Smith, B.D., when he presented the second sermon in his series on "Present Blessings from the Great War." The subject last evening was "The Breakdown of a Purely Military Form of Philosophy," and the text was Mark xii:30-31—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, ... Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Mr. Smith said in part:—

In these words Jesus laid down the true philosophy that is to rule and govern the life of all His faithful followers. It is a philosophy of love—love to God and man.

What is a nation? It is a group of individuals dwelling on the same soil, with common ideals and destiny. As is the man so is the nation, for every citizen is a link in the national chain.

What is a world? It is all the nations on the planet, working together for the highest good of all.

And the same philosophy is suitable for the single individuals as well as for the entirety of mankind. And Jesus lays down the philosophy that is to be our guide—not military but merciful, not lustful and arrogant, but loving and altruistic. In proportion as men and nations and the world have made Christ's rule of love theirs, have they been helpful and brotherly; and whenever they have departed from this rule of love they have degenerated.

The story of God's chosen people Israel is a sample and illustration of this truth. God's promise to Abraham was "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blest." Israel was elect for the sake of the non-elect, and when Israel obeyed her divine mission she had prosperity, from the days of Abraham to Solomon. But when she ceased to love God and her neighbor, and became material and military in her ideals she was doomed and passed into exile and oblivion. Every contemporaneous nation of the ancient and mediaeval world that exalted military ideals and lived by the sword of conquest and the love of force, has perished from the earth. The British Empire was founded on Christ's conception of a good world, namely, love to God and our neighbor. That is why she has had such a marvellous history, and has been the wonder and pride and envy of all nations. She has never given her allegiance to a purely military form of national philosophy, and her leaders have been God-fearing, Bible-loving and Christ-serving men. And whenever she has departed from those ideals of love and service and helpfulness she has always suffered and repented and recovered her first love; and so God has redeemed His promise: "Them that honor me I will honor." One of the very real blessings of the present awful war is that it is showing mankind in realistic and awful experience the harvest of a purely military form of philosophy. That is why we are fighting today. It is for the ideals laid down by Christ, and which we must help to make triumphant in the earth. Since the Franco-German war of 1870 the ruling party in Germany has gone upon the principle that might makes right, and that a nation can do what it pleases if only it is big enough to bully the world, and defy demands for justice and brotherhood among men. We all know this is an historical fact, and Germany herself, from the Kaiser to the cottager, readily admits the charge—indeed glories in it. The character of this German military philosophy is exactly expressed by the leaders of the "Young Germany" movement. One of them wrote in its official organ for 1913:—

"War is the noblest and holiest expression of human activity. For us, too, the glad great hour of battle will strike. Still and deep in the German heart must live the joy of battle and the longing for it. Let us ridicule to the utmost the old women in breeches who fear war and deplore it as cruel and revolting. No; war is beautiful, its august sublimity elevates the human heart beyond the earthly and the common. In the cloud palace above sit the heroes, Frederick the Great, Blucher, and all the men of action—the great Emperor, Moltke, Roon and Bismarck—are there as well, but not the old women who would take away our joy in war. When here on earth a battle is won by German arms and the faithful dead ascend to Heaven, a Potsdam lance-corporal will call the guard to the door, and old 'Fritzy,' springing from his golden throne, will give the command to present arms. That is the heaven of Young Germany."

That is what I mean when I say Germany is controlled by a purely military philosophy. And the root of this evil is not really found in the mess-room or the barracks, but in the schools and great universities, which have been degraded by the state into a powerful and malign instrument for so diffusing military ideals and standards in Germany that they now enthrall and dominate all the normal processes of German thought. For 40 years the German state has been an autocratic and military tyranny; and its supreme and all sufficient expression is the Emperor, the army and the fleet. The same military philosophy is commended by Frederick von Bernhardi, a noted German general of cavalry (now retired) in his book entitled, "How Germany Makes War." His governing idea is that war is a "biological necessity" for the German nation and the principal goal, of their policy. This military philosophy has hatched out all the horrible brood of evils that have stained and blackened Germany in this present great war. This is why Belgium is today a country without a government and a people without a home. This explains the long list of unnameable horrors perpetrated by Germany during the past year, horrors that might well make savages and cannibals blush. But this diabolical disregard of individual and national rights has created in the individual heart and in the national conscience of the world such a regard for the sacredness of an obligation as the world has never witnessed. It will be a long day before we hear again of a national treaty as being only "a scrap of paper." And out of this will grow a stronger regard for all promises and forms of human rights and human obligations. And I think you will agree with me that this collapse of purely military philosophy is a great blessing, and a vindication of the teachings of Christ and the New Testament. I believe that every man and woman who responds to the call of King and country today is hastening on that blessed day of Christ when His kingdom of peace and brotherhood shall prevail over all the earth.

ALGONQUIN PARK

Guests at the Highland Inn and the log cabin camps operated by the Grand Trunk Railway System in Algonquin Park, are enthusiastic this year over the splendid fishing that has been experienced and the excellent service that is being given at this popular resort. A letter from one of the chief officials of the Studebaker Corporation, Detroit, Mich., has been received expressing admiration for the complete equipment of the log cabin camps and the many comforts and conveniences that are offered there.

Those desiring accommodation should write Miss Jean Lindsay, Manager of the Highland Inn, and handsome descriptive literature can be had from any Grand Trunk agent. August and September are two of the most delightful months of the year in this charming region.

Benefit Societies At S. A. Citadel

The members of the 'Prentice Boys, True Blues, Sons of England and loyal Orange Lodges, at the invitation of Captain Thos. Ruston attended divine service yesterday afternoon. The respective societies gathered at the L. T. B. room and headed by the Salvation Army Band paraded to the citadel. The service was opened by singing "Stand up, Stand up, for Jesus"; after which Captain Laing led in prayer. Mrs. (Captain) Ruston sang "Rock of Ages," after which she, on behalf of the mothers and sisters of the Salvation Army, welcomed the brethren to the service, wishing them every blessing and success in their work of extending an assisting hand to those who were in need and in making provision for the widows and orphans.

The band and songster brigade rendered excellent service, which added greatly to the afternoon's meeting.

Before the offering was taken up, Captain Ruston made a special appeal for a liberal response, as he said he had decided to hand it over to headquarters to assist in supplying five motor ambulances which the Army were going to send to the front.

Captain Ruston took for his text: "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15:14.)

In a very apt way he dealt with the human friendship; what it meant to those who entered into friendship; that in many cases friendship was misplaced; for instance, how the Germans, after accepting of our friendship as an Empire, used our markets for the sale of their goods and thereby securing wealth to produce ammunition to slay those who had been their friends. They had endeavored to keep that friendship, but it was of no avail. He went on to deal with the spiritual side of friendship, and in conclusion he spoke of the friends on the battlefield, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

After the Benediction the band played 'God Save the King," which brought to a close a unique service in the fact that it was the first time in the history of this city, that the above mentioned societies had ever as a body been inside the Salvation Army citadel to divine worship.

Submarine Badge.

As a crown is the badge of kings, as three balls are the badge of pawnbrokers, so the badge of a submarine officer is a handful of cotton waste. When the half dozen officers of a modern submarine, clad in their black leather waterproof suits, come aboard a sailor stands on the tiny gangway to receive them, and to each he hands his waste rolled in a neat ball. The reason is that the steel doors and steel walls of a submarine sweat oil eternally. The steel seats sweat oil. The submarine officer before opening a door or before sitting down wipes the oil from the knob or from the seat with an unconscious gesture like that of pulling up the trousers to keep them from bagging. Jovial young submarine lieutenants say that even the dishes sweat oil on a submarine trip. They say that before filling their plates with meat they mechanically wipe the oil from them with their balls of oily waste.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Sharp Distinction.

A merited retort is not always a retort courteous. The rebuke that was administered to a party of intruding tourists by the old watchman who was set to guard the ruins of College hall at Wellesley not long after the great fire conveyed a keen but subtle reproach.

"Ye've got to keep out!" he ordered gruffly when he caught them trying to slip under the ropes that surrounded the crumbling walls.

The inquisitive visitors paused and eyed first the ruins and then their determined guardian.

"See here," a callow youth accosted him; "we're willing to risk it, and we'll take all the responsibility. What do you care if we lose our lives?"

"Ye've got to keep out. I ain't thinkin' of your lives; I'm thinkin' of me job."—Youth's Companion.

Nothing to Wear.

There are women who live to dress, and the more frequent and radical the changes are the better they like it. If their pocketbooks can stand it, no great harm is done. But the great majority of women can't afford to keep up with this pace. The result is that some stay at home because their clothes are not in the latest style, many are made unhappy, and others keep up with the procession, it matters not what may be the cost.

If a man can wear the same dress suit for eight or ten years and not look like a freak, why is it not possible to design an evening gown for women that will be in good style as long as it may be worn? It is absurd to hear a woman say, "I haven't a thing to wear," when she may have a half dozen gowns all in good condition.—Frances Frear in Leslie's.

Highland Mary.

Small as is the number of statues of women in Britain, there are two of one woman, concerning whom very little is actually known save that she was of humble origin and was associated with the life of Scotland's greatest poet. Passengers by the Clyde steamboats are familiar with the statue of Mary Campbell, whom Burns immortalized as Highland Mary, which overlooks the pier at Dunoon. There was a good deal of controversy about the memorial at the time of its erection, and the late Mr. Henley referred to it in his famous "Essay on Burns" as a "fantasy in bronze." Liverpool, with which Mary Campbell had no association whatsoever, has also chosen to commemorate her, and a marble statue stands in the palm house at Sefton park, encircled with choicest blooms all the year round.—London Mail.

Lost Votes.

A parliamentary candidate lost quite a number of votes by making a generous promise to his own wife. He promised his better half that if he were successful at the poll he would buy her a new sealskin coat and hat to match. His wife was so pleased with this kindly offer that she at once went and told all her lady friends about it. Every lady to whom this piece of news was imparted, of course, said to the candidate's wife at once, "Oh, how very nice, dear!" but equally, of course, immediately went off home to her husband and said: "Take care you don't vote for Mr. A., dear. Fancy that stuck up Mrs. A. in a new sealskin while my old one is so shabby!"—London Express.

Kipling Wouldn't Talk.

Invited in 1880 to speak at a public dinner in London in aid of an orphan asylum Rudyard Kipling wrote:

"I simply can't make a speech in public. It isn't in my power—not for all the orphans in the world. I have experimented on grownup people, and the result wasn't pretty. I'd sooner thrash an orphan or give it its bottle than speak to the orphans' well wishers after a heavy meal."

MANITOBA.

All eyes for the nonce are cast on Manitoba. Just when all parties should be united the Province has been through the throes of a general election. But it was the people themselves who brought on the election. Public sentiment refused to be satisfied with the arrangement entered into by the retiring Roblin Government and the incoming Norris Administration. "Had this opposition to the 'deal'," says the Winnipeg Telegram, "not manifested itself, the Norris party would have been left in uncontested control of the Government, and enough Conservatives would have resigned their seat to give the new Government a working majority. The Norris Government, however, were forced to go to the people, and the people themselves have now given them a popular mandate, and one which is sufficiently emphatic to leave no room for dispute."

As to the result of the election there could be but little doubt, although the majority is greater than was anticipated. As we pointed out on Saturday the commission appointed by the Liberals to inquire into the Fullerton charges did their best to whitewash the Liberals, and a few days before the election gave their decision that the charges had not been proved, although the strongest evidence was adduced that $25,000 was handed over to an agent of the Liberal party. It was evident that this would have a great effect upon the general body of voters, as it was intended it should. The Winnipeg Telegram, which is regarded as the mouthpiece of the official party, ascribes the defeat to the fact that "the voters were incapable or unwilling to distinguish between the rejuvenated Conservative party and the former Roblin Government, which had retired to private life some weeks ago."

Their choice was a limited one. They had to choose between giving their support to a party, some of the leaders of which were tainted by graft, or to a party which was certainly not above suspicion. They chose the latter, as the lesser of two evils, and it is to be hoped they will not have to suffer for their decision. Among other things which also contributed to encompassing the turnover, the Telegram enumerates the absence of a good many Conservatives at the war, the united opposition of the liquor interests, and the fact that the naturalized German and Austrian voters of the Province were led to believe that the Conservative party is to blame for Canada's participation in the war. The Telegram says there is ample proof that seditious arguments were used by Liberal speakers in districts where the foreign vote abounds, and urges that the incident should not be allowed to pass unnoticed.

Sir James Aikins is a politician whose fair name has never been besmirched in connection with any scandal. But he made the mistake of introducing Prohibition into his programme. As we remarked on Saturday, "It is doubtful if the Province is ripe for such a drastic measure as total prohibition." Temperance reform is one thing; total prohibition is another. Prohibition is a distinctly un-English proposition; and it is a significant fact that every English-speaking Conservative member of the late Legislature who faced the electorate went down to defeat, except one. In other respects the Conservative programme was a progressive and democratic one, and advocated measures which if carried into effect would have insured clean and efficient administration for the Province.

The result of the election is satisfactory from the standpoint of purity in political life. It shows that the electors will not tolerate discreditable action by politicians. The fact is that we are so near the States that we have imbibed too much of the American mode of conducting politics. Such practices as those which have been brought to light in Manitoba would not have been possible in England. The days of graft in political life in Canada are over. The Ross Administration in Ontario and the Laurier regime in the Federal Parliament opened the eyes of the electors to the baneful effects of graft. Sir Robert Borden has manfully set his face against anything pertaining to dishonorable action on the part of members of Parliament. In the Ontario Legislature Sir James Whitney initiated a high standard of probity, which is being maintained by his successor, Premier Hearst. There is reason to believe that the days of the grafter are numbered, and that a brighter era is about to dawn upon the political life of Canada.

TROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

It is not to be denied that the limitations which it is sought to impose on the activities of our submarines are mainly in the interests of England.

The principles of humanity, as well as the claim that the interest of neutrals, or even friendly Powers, should carefully be kept in mind, cannot be expected to meet with unquestioning consideration on the part of a nation which is forced by the overwhelming numerical superiority of the enemy to fight for her existence. Nor can neutrals demand that Germany should give up any means she may have at hand to prevent neutral commercial concerns from prolonging the war by supplying her enemies with munitions.

We do not wish to wage war on innocent passengers, and therefore we hope most sincerely that the conditions which render it possible for the enemy to use such passengers as a shield for its operations may henceforth be avoided.—Cologne Gazette.

("From the very first day of the war, the British fleet gained such absolute control of the ocean roads, and so evident a naval superiority, that the bublic has come to take things for granted. We must not lose sight of the advantage we gained by this uncontested superiority."—Le Temps, Paris.)

Oh, battleships of Britain! just one sad year ago
Ye caught the midnight summons to the strife
That sped you to the ocean, to curb the haughty foe—
To guard our Empire's honor—and her life.

Your post ye took whole-hearted; your course before you lay—
Your best to keep the fredom of the seas;
To the hearts of struggling nations ye stood the strength and stay,
Nor failed them as the bulwark of the free!

Gallantly ye kept your tryst, through anxious nights and days,
Through storm and stress and truggle holding fast,
From the torrid southern islands, to the cold, grey northern seas,
Watching for the Teuton eagle as he passed.

On quarter-deck or masthead, by fog or tempest crossed,
While the surging waves dashed wildly o'er the deck,
Unresting in their staunchness, your heroes kept their post,
Or fighting-went down, calmly, with the wreck

'Neath the moonlight or the starlight, your work was never done;
Unceasing was your constant watch and ward,
From the rosy flush of dawn-light, till sank the golden sun,
'Neath the mighty waste of waters that ye guard!

For you there's no Trafalgar—to strike one fatal blow
'Neath "the flag that braves the battle and the breeze;
But ye keep undimmed the glory of Britain's Island story,
And—by God's grace—the freedom of the seas!

NO USE FOR AMERICANS

Their Positionin Germany is Becoming Unbearable

LONDON, Aug. 7.—A Berne despatch to the London Morning Post says that a number of Americans are still arriving from Germany and all agree in stating that the position of their fellow subjects in the latter country is becoming unbearable, except in the case of German-Americans or renegade Irish Americans of the stamp of Sir Roger Casement. One of these Americans, lately arrived in Switzerland from Germany, says Casement was recently sent to visit a camp in Germany where Irish prisoners of war were interned in order that he might impress them with his endeavor to prejudice them against England. As soon as he began to speak, however, they discovered who he was and a rush was made upon him. He would have been lynched had he not been at once surrounded by armed guards.

Grain Crops Above Average

In Eastern Ontario Corn Has Made Remarkable Growth

A special press bulletin issued by the Census and Statistics Office gives the following report on the condition of field crops in Ontario at the end of July as summarized from telegrams received from the Dominion farms and stations.

From Essex County it is reported that to the north excessive rains have damaged corn and hoed crops; in the south there is no damage and there is promise of splendid crops. Wheat and barley are all harvested. Oats are a splendid crop and are now being harvested. From Galt in Waterloo County exceptionally heavy rainfalls are reported, hay and wheat are being harvested under difficulties. Barley and hoed crops never looked better. Oats are heavy but show considerable smut. Brooklin, Ontario County, reports showery weather all the month and no damage. Fall wheat, well ripened, is being harvested. Barley is an average and oats are a full crop. Corn and root crops are doing well. Pasture is good, but hay is light and injured by rain.

In Eastern Ontario the grain crops have filled very well and promise better than an average yield. The hay crop has turned out to be better than was expected in June. Corn and roots and all hoed crops have made good growth during July, especially corn, which has made a remarkable growth due to the showers of the earlier part and the high temperature which prevailed during the whole of the month.

AIRCRAFT FOR THE WORLD.

Toronto Has Plunged Vigorously Into New Industry.

Toronto will soon be assembling aeroplanes for the world. Britain is taking unlimited supplies, a big flying boat has been built for Russia, Spain has ordered twelve machines, and now an order is expected from the Government of India. None of the mother country's daughters has yet aeroplane squadrons of her own. It looks as if India were to lead the daughter nations in this direction.

Mr. J. A. McCurdy said a few days ago that he thought Canada had at the present moment an unrivalled opportunity for the formation of an aerial squadron as part of the Dominion's defence system. There would never be a better one. The men, the equipment, the training organization were available now.

Mr. McCurdy pointed out that the Canadian Curtiss School was training 52 pupils to fly at the present time, while the total number of the students in all the British schools totalled only 79. Beginning recently instruction has been given with the aid of three water and three land machines. The majority of the students are training for the British naval squadron, whose members are entrusted with the defence of Britain's shores from invasion, their only base in Flanders and France being at Dunkirk. The fame of the good qualities of these young Canadian airmen has reached the ears of the British army aviation authorities, whose representatives are in the thick of the fighting, and Capt. Ross Hume has been sent to Toronto to secure recruits for the Royal Flying Corps. "Two hundred if I can get them," says Captain Hume. The men will be trained at the Curtiss School and will have the cost of their course returned to them when they pass the necessary tests. Captain Hume has already received the names of six recruits: Messrs. E. McLaughlin, Ottawa; F. O'Beirne, Stratford; and Joy, Van Nostrand, Williams and G. Knight, Toronto. Capt. Hume went to the firing line in August last, but has recently been kept from active service by injuries received in a forced landing. "The British have an undoubted supremacy in the air," he said.

The mammoth aeroplane, which is being built for Britain in Toronto, will be ready very soon now. The aeroplanes which are being constructed for the British authorities in Toronto have to show a speed of 85 miles an hour on a measured mile at Long Branch and climb 3,000 feet in seven minutes. There will be a test flight on Thursday. The Strachan avenue factory is a hive of industry, and it is understood that the military authorities will furnish a military patrol to guard it from intruders.

War Coat From the Front.

A grey goatskin coat, unlined, and with sleeves of soft, dark fur, is one of the tangible reminders to Mrs. Fred Kelly of Avenue road that her second son, Mr. Lawrence St. George Kelly, was through the winter campaign at the front. The coat, and some spent shells (two French, two German) picked up on the battlefield and now a case for his mother's knitting needles, came to Toronto a few days ago from Mr. Kelly, who is in hospital at Rouen, badly wounded. The young lieutenant, who is in the 4th Battalion, 1st Brigade, Canadian Field Artillery, omitted to mention the gallantry which sent him there, but comrades and superior officers have done this for him in glowing terms.

Mr. Kelly was one of the officers "who had the honor to be sent forward with the guns," and managed to get off forty rounds within 70 yards of the enemy, when a big Krupp smashed his gun, and an exploding mine crushed his legs. A brother officer, writing home, says: "The Divisional Staff, the chaplain, Canon Almon, the two Hansons, Capt. Bell, Captain Crerar, whom we met at headquarters, all think Kelly has done a fine piece of work."

Extra Money Hidden
In Goodyear Fortified Tires

Goodyear prices are 37 per cent less than two years ago. As rubber came down and Goodyear sales kept growing, we lowered our factory cost per tire. So we've given motorists a tremendous saving.

Yet we've also built five great defenses into Goodyear Fortified Tires. These combat the worst attacks a tire encounters.

Where the Money Goes

Four of these extra values are hidden from view. In a poor tire skimping likewise goes unseen. The difference is enormous, but it doesn't show till you run a Goodyear and some rival tire on opposite wheels.

Then you learn what thousands know—that you can't judge a tire on looks.

Our All-Weather Tread is tough and double-thick. So it gives the longer mileage and greater resistance to punctures.

Our "On-Air" Cure—a costly process—eliminates blowouts due in rival tires to wrinkled fabric.

Our No-Rim-Cut Feature avoids rim-cutting in the only successful way. We would make more profit by using the common method.

Our Rubber Rivets, vulcanized between the tread and "carcass," make the two practically inseparable.

Our Braided Wire Bands of 126 piano wires are vulcanized into the beads of each tire. This feature makes the base unstretchable. No other method holds the tire on the rim so securely.

Off With Habit

In all these ways we're putting extra money into Goodyear Fortified Tires. They mean lowest cost per mile and greatest freedom from tire trouble. That's why Goodyears—in four short years—have won top place.

So don't—from mere habit—buy imported tires. Get these new-day advances found only in Goodyear Made-in-Canada Tires. See your dealer at once and request our new price on your size.

Urges Aid for Prisoners.

An urgent appeal for organized action in behalf of Canadian prisoners in Germany has come from Pte. Thomas A. Gamey in Giessen to R. R. Gamey, M.P.P. in the Ontario Legislature for Manitoulin. Pte. Gamey is a man of more than forty, who went from the Governor-General's Body Guards. He was wounded at St. Julien and captured, and is recovering. He writes:

"You doubtless know more about us than we of the outside world. Is there no movement in our behalf? Has no one backbone enough to act or urge the Government? No money, tobacco; in fact, nothing. Kindly treatment, but bill-of-fare not what we were accustomed to, and confinement hard to endure. Do something, cable and write."

To Save the Non-Com.

The sequel to the heroism of Lieutenant R. E. Hancock, of the 1st Devonshires, is alas! a sad one. On October 23rd he left his trench, although the German guns were belching forth a hail of lead, and going back some sixty yards, over absolutely bare ground, picked up Corporal Warwick, who had fallen whilst coming up with a party of reinforcements, and conveyed the non-commissioned officer to the cover of a haystack. The lieutenant then returned to his trench, only to be killed later in action.

"Stand Solid!"

"The captain said, 'Get up, men; stand solid!' We formed about six deep. Then we gave them the surprise of their lives. We could just see a black mass in front of our trenches, and we let out for all we were worth. We were like devils possessed. I could feel my bayonet go through something soft. Not a German got his foot in the trench. They ran down the slopes like rabbits, and to help them we gave them five rounds rapid."—Private D. Hamilton, Royal Scots.

A Hero Indeed.

"When I got hit, I couldn't say how long I lay there, but a chum of mine, Tommy Quaife, under a perfect hail of bullets and shells, dragged me to safety, and said, 'Cheer up, Smiler, here's a tag. I'm going back for Sandy' (his other chum). He never got there. Poor Tommy got a piece of shell, and was buried the same night. If ever a hero lived he was one."—Sergeant J. Rolfe, 2nd Battalion, King's Royal Rifles.

Accidental Inventions.

The ancients believed that there was a certain kind of mineral substance in existence by means of which all the common metals could be turned into gold. This supposed substance was called the philosopher's stone, and the alchemists of classic times and during the middle ages spent much time and labor in search of this wonderful substance.

Of course, since nothing of the kind ever existed it was never found, but it is worth remembering that some of the most notable inventions were discovered in this wide search. It was in looking for the philosopher's stone that the German chemist, Botticher, stumbled upon the secret of making the beautiful Dresden porcelain. Roger Bacon in the same way, discovered the composition of gunpowder. Geber found the properties of acids; Van Helmont discovered the nature of gas, and Dr. Glauber found the secret of making the salts which now bear his name.—Columbus Dispatch.

Printers and High Hats.

In no trade, writes a correspondent has the fall from favor of the top hat been more marked than among printers. The old time compositor the "case hand," as he is now termed to distinguish him from the linotype operator—never forgot that he was the aristocrat of the labor world, entitled, as he proudly claimed, alone among old time craftsmen to wear a sword the mark of the gentleman. A quarter of a century back top hats were common wear in printing offices. They are found still in quiet backwaters of the trade. But what would happen if the linotype operator came to his "mangle" nowadays wearing one? He would probably be pelted to death with "slugs." If he owns one he keeps it for funerals, christenings and weddings. One hat I know of has already committed polygamy, having been freely loaned to bridegrooms whose wardrobe was minus the hat of state.—London Chronicle.

Voices of Animals.

There is a chapter in the natural history of animals that has hardly been touched upon as yet and that will be especially interesting with reference to families. The voices of animals have a family character not to be mistaken. All the canidae bark and howl—the fox, the wolf, the dog—have the same kind of utterances, though on a somewhat different pitch. All the bears growl, from the white bear to the small black bear of the Andes. All the cats meow, from our quiet fireside companion to the lions and tigers and panthers of the forest and jungle. This last may seem a strange assertion, but to any one who has listened critically to their sounds and analyzed their voices the roar of the lion is but a gigantic meow, bearing about the same proportion to that of a cat as its stately and majestic form does to the smaller, softer, more peaceful aspect of the cat.—Agassiz.

Jones—Do you know, I fancy I have quite a literary bent. Friend—All right, my boy. Keep on and you'll be worse than bent; you'll be broke.—Stray Stories.

How to B[illegible]n Orator.

A politician at the end of a speech was congratulated for his oratory.

"What is your recipe for good oratory?" a reporter asked.

"I am afraid oratory comes natural," was the reply. "There is, though, one recipe for it—old Job Walmby's, but it is hardly satisfactory. 'Tha wants to be a public speyker, does tha, lad?' Job in his Yorkshire dialect would say, 'an' tha thinks Aw'm the chap to put tha up to a wrinkle aboot it? That's right; Aw am. Now, bark tha! When tha rises to meek thy speych bit taable an' oppen thy mawth. If nowt comes tak' a sup o' water an' bit taable again. Thin oppen thy mawth wider than afoor. Thin, if nowt comes, tak' thysen off an' leave public spekin' to sich as me.'"—London Tit-Bits.

Our Schools and Our Flag.

The national pledge for our flag was recommended by the American Flag Day association. The pupils, standing with right hand uplifted, palm upward, to a line with the forehead, in the attitude of salute, repeat the pledge in these words: "I pledge allegiance to my flag and to the republic for which it stands. One nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." At the words "to my flag" each one extends the right hand gracefully, palm upward, toward the flag until the end of the pledge; then the hand is dropped to the side.

Children in the primary grades are taught to repeat a shorter pledge in these words: "I give my head and my heart to God and my country. One country, one language, one flag."—Philadelphia Press.

Bombay's Huge Road Mirror.

Road mirrors are not rare in England, where they are set at dangerous turns or crossings to warn drivers of vehicles or pedestrians just around the corner. Their success was immediate, and some American cities are showing an interest in the device. Bombay, however, has led the world with the largest road mirror on record as well as the first in India. It is set at the corner of Gamdevi road and Hughes road, a dangerous point, and measures 5 by 10 feet, which is seven times as large as the average English road mirror.—New York Independent.

"Now," said the doctor, "you take this medicine just as I told you, and you will sleep like a baby."

Ananias Sline's Airship

Story of a Troubled Conscience.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The very day I arrived at Quince Harbor I met the Widow Rowell. She was emerging from Em Bevis' department store, and on her comely face was a baffled look.

"It has something to do with Ananias Sline," was my first thought, for these two interesting widows, Em Bevis and Hetty Rowell, were boldly contesting for the heart and hand of Ananias Sline, one time mate of the good ship Indus and now porter in the Quince Harbor bank.

"Good morning, Miss Telham," she gave greeting. "How's Maria's rheumatism?"

"Much better than it was. And how are you?"

The little widow cast a baleful backward glance at the department store, where I distinctly saw Em Bevis' sleekly pompadoured head against the window. "I'm fine! Splendid!" responded the Widow Rowell vivaciously. "Have you heard about Mr. Sline's aeroplane? Captain Barnabas said Ananias had been building one. He makes his trial flight tonight. I'll tell you something if you won't tell," she added proudly.

"You may confide in me, Mrs. Rowell," I reproached her. "I shall be as silent as the grave."

She drew nearer and whispered:

"I'm going up in the airship with Ananias!"

And while I listened, aghast, she patted my arm and darted away down the village street.

Suddenly I remembered that I had an errand at Em Bevis' store, and as I mounted the steps the door flew open and Mrs. Bevis' ample form was bowing me inside, and her heavy features relaxed in a generous smile of welcome.

"You heard about Mr. Sline's airship?" she asked suddenly.

"Yes. He makes a trial flight today," I repeated quickly, for I was mindful of Hetty Rowell's secret locked in my breast.

She glanced toward her two clerks, young girls, bright eyed and rosy cheeked, who were exchanging witticisms with the stage driver, who had just delivered an express package.

"He's going to take a passenger," whispered the Widow Bevis.

"Who? Ned Roberts?" I glanced at the lanky stage driver.

"No; Ananias Sline!"

"Oh, a passenger in the airship?" So Hetty's secret was no secret after all.

She nodded.

"It's a secret. Perhaps you can guess." She smiled archly.

"You?" I weakly asked.

"Yes. Don't tell a soul," she cautioned, although I am sure she hoped I would confide the news to Hetty Rowell.

I spent the afternoon on the bay with Captain Barnabas and his wife, Maria. As we tied up at the little landing below the Fish cottage the captain cast a glance at the wind signal.

"Not a puff!" he ejaculated. "There isn't a mortal reason why Ananias can't make that flight tonight."

"Bright moonlight, too," added Maria. "Hurry up and come to supper so's we can go right over to Terry's field. I want a good look at the critter before it's smashed to bits."

"Will the machine really fly?" I asked as we ate a hurried meal.

"So Ananias says," returned the captain dryly. Ananias had been his first mate on many voyages, and Captain Fish was confident that the truth was not in Ananias.

When we reached Terry's ten acre field the moon was lifting a great silver disk above the pine woods. The field was flooded with white light, revealing the gathering crowd of villagers.

In the middle of the moonlit space was a great white winged object surrounded by curious men and boys.

This was Ananias Sline's airship.

We approached the awkward looking object and found Ananias himself, looking absurdly small in a leather aviation suit and helmet. He looked like a brown gnome.

He greeted us with his accustomed dignity, but even while he explained the mysteries of the Hawk, as he had named it, his cold blue eyes were searching the arriving crowds.

"He is looking for Hetty, or is it Em Bevis?" I thought, wondering how this latest scheme of Mr. Sline's would work out. Would he have one passenger or two?

A hand plucked at my sleeve. It was Hetty Rowell, almost unrecognizable in heavy skirt, woolen sweater under her winter coat and a green veil wound around her head and face so that only her sharp gray eyes were visible.

"Hetty, aren't you afraid?" I whispered.

She smiled proudly.

"Not with him. Ananias knows and understands his own machine."

She slipped past me and stood talking to Ananias, who continued to peer nervously around while he talked.

There was the sound of heavy breathing close beside me. Em Bevis, as strangely attired as her rival, stood there, her eyes gleaming with resolution. She pushed past me and strode toward Ananias and the Widow Rowell.

Before she reached them there was a shout. Alvin Barker, a teller in the bank, jumped from his automobile and half carried a veiled lady to the airship and lifted her into the passenger's seat, strapping her in with deft rapidity.

"There's your passenger, Ananias," he muttered in a choked tone. "Clear the way, all of you!" he shouted.

The crowd fell back. Ananias jumped nimbly into the pilot's seat, was strapped in, Barker whirled the propeller, the engine started, stopped, started again, and the ungainly bird teetered over the ground on its landing wheels.

It mounted a rise, then lifted and rose obliquely toward the pale moon.

From the pilot's seat leaned a gnomelike figure, Ananias Sline.

In the passenger's seat, stiffly erect, sat the passenger, the veiled lady.

On the ground two other veiled ladies stood shoulder to shoulder and gazed upward after the vanishing Ananias.

For the moment a common grievance declared a truce between them.

"Who was she?" rumbled Em Bevis in her deep tones.

The Widow Rowell cleared her voice of emotion.

"It looked like that Underwood girl from Snarling Hollow," she muttered.

The shout of applause which had arisen when Ananias Sline sailed away died down as the airship became a dark speck against the moon's face.

Silence fell upon Terry's field—silence which was broken by confused shouts.

We turned hastily to discover Haywood Drayton's big motorcar plunging across the grassy field. Haywood Drayton was president of the Quince Harbor bank.

Mr. Drayton jumped from his motorcar, followed by the imposing form of Constable Lee.

Alvin Barker was sliding toward his own little runabout when the big constable's hand fell upon his arm.

"I guess you'll have to come along with me, Alvin," he said good naturedly, and as the teller struggled to free himself the officer's hand tightened its hold.

"Be a good boy, Alvin," he coaxed. "You can't rob the bank without being punished for it, you know!"

"It was Ananias," quavered the teller desperately.

"Ananias is an accessory; don't forget that. We must get him," put in Haywood Drayton.

"He's got a lady with him!" some one said, and the constable laughed.

"A nice lady—deaf, dumb and blind," he explained between chuckles—"a wax figger from Em Bevis' show window, her holler form filled with packages of greenbacks from the bank. Oh, Ananias is eloping with an heiress, all right!"

Em Bevis and Hetty Rowell exchanged glances of dismay.

"Look!" screamed some one. "He is coming back!"

We gazed up at the pale star strewn sky.

Out of the silence came the throb of the airship's engine, and the huge wings were directly over Terry's field.

Down swooped Ananias Sline's airship until it was 200 feet above us. For a moment it hovered, rocking violently.

Then some one screamed in horror, for a dark object was falling from the airship—a human form.

A shuddering cry went up as the veiled passenger struck the ground and was still.

Some one remembered what the constable had said about the wax figure in Em Bevis' show window.

"Let's see!" he shouted, and ran forward.

Sure enough, the poor veiled lady was the familiar figure we had often seen in Mrs. Bevis' window. But her waxen head was smashed to atoms, and her broken form revealed rolls and wads of newspapers—that was all.

Cunning Alvin Barker had tempted Ananias to run away with the stolen money, while all the time he had hidden the money in a safe place and had stuffed the dummy passenger with paper.

Ananias, conscience stricken—perhaps fear stricken, who knows?—had repented and returned to drop the lady and the loot upon Terry's field. He might have made his escape in the Hawk had not something happened to the engine.

So the Hawk came flopping to earth, and Ananias crept out of the ruins and sought Constable Lee to give himself up.

An hour afterward two veiled ladies appeared in the constable's office. One was Em Bevis, and the other was Hetty Rowell. They came to proffer bail for the aviator's release.

"Cap'n Fish bailed him out an hour ago," explained Lee. "I don't reckon we can do much agin a man's running off with wads of newspaper—unless," he added hopefully, "you want to make a charge against him for stealing your wax figger, Em!"

Em Bevis looked thoughtful.

"'Twan't my figger, Jim," she said at last. "I gave it to Ananias, didn't I, Hetty?"

Hetty Rowell nodded emphatically. "Of course she did!"

"Then there ain't any case against him," declared Jim Lee.

When I told Ananias Sline of this noble deed on the part of Em Bevis his bulbous blue eyes filled with emotional tears. I had not believed he could weep any more than a fish could shed tears.

"Miss Telham," sniffed Ananias, "that's why I can't make up my mind to marry either one of them noble wimmen. It's because I don't feel I'm good enough for 'em."

And I almost believed him!

No pain, no palm; no thorns, no throne; no gall, no glory; no cross, no crown.

NEW SOUTH WALES HAS GIVEN $5,000,000

The Proceeds of "Australia Day" Will Probably Add Over Million

SYDNEY, Aug. 7.—New South Wales has contributed more than $5,000,000 toward charities since the beginning of hostilities. The proceeds from "Australia Day" will probably add another million and a quarter to the total of the first year of the war.

The Colony's donations include about $1,500,000 sent to Belgium; $500,000 for Red Cross work, and $1,000,000 for local use.

DARDANELLES' SITUATION

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The situation in the Dardanelles on the front held by the Australian troops is excellent, although there has been continuous heavy fighting involving serious casualties on both sides, according to the British press representative on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

"The Turks, since their last repulse," the observer says, "have shown much less aggressiveness, seeming more content to sit in the trenches than to attempt an offensive movement. Bomb-throwing and mining now are the chief methods of warfare, the troops being kept occupied constantly in building and re-building trenches, which crumble away rapidly every day owing to the soft sandy soil.

"Heavy Turkish reinforcements are being constantly brought into advanced positions, showing that the Turks realize the importance of holding back any further attempt of the Allies to encroach on the peninsula."

GERMANS' LATEST FEAR

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 7.—According to the Danish newspapers Germans are now fear a landing of hostile troops on the western coast of Schleswig.

The German staff have taken elaborate measures to guard against an attack on the Kiel Canal. The rigid regulations made travel in Schleswig almost impossible.

CHAPTER XXIIII.

"Brave, Atlanta!"

Phillis received an ovation as soon as she crossed the threshold. Dulce, who was listening for her footsteps, rushed out into the little hall, and dragged her in, as though she were too weary to have any movement or valition of her own. And then Nan came up, in her calm elder-sisterly way, and put her arm round her, and hoped she was not so very tired, and there was so much to say, and so much to do, and she wanted her advice, and so on.

And on Nan's forehead lay a thoughtful pucker; and on the centre-table were sundry breadths of green silk, crisp-looking and faintly bronzed, like withered leaves with the sun on them.

"Oh, dear! has Miss Drummond been here in my absence?" asked Phillis, with the overwhelmed feeling of a beginner, who has not yet learned to separate and classify, or the rich value of odd moments. "Three dresses to be done at once!"

"One at a time. But never mind Miss Drummond's this moment. Mother is safe in the store cupboard for the next half-hour; and we want to know what you mean by your ridiculous message, 'Trimmings, not Squails.' Dulce is dying of curiosity, and so am I."

"Yes; but she looks so hot and tired that she must refresh herself first." And Dulce placed on her sister's lap a plate of yellow plums, perfectly bedded in moss, which had come from the vicarage garden. And as Phillis enjoyed the dainty repast and poured out her morning's experiences in the ears of her astonished auditors, lo, the humiliation and the sting of the situation was forgotten and only an intense sense of the humor of the situation remained.

It was Dulce whose pink cheeks were burning now.

"Oh, Phillis! how can you? It is to dreadful to think about! That fat old thing, too! Why, she is twice as big as Mrs. Squails!"

"Beggars cannot be choosers, my dear," replied Phillis, airily; for rest was pleasant, and the fruit was good, and it was so delicious to feel all that was over and she was safe in her nest again; and then the pleasure of talking it over! "Do you know—?" she began, in a disconnected manner, and then sat and stared at her sisters with luminous gray eyes, until they begged to know what the new idea was.

"Oh, nothing," she replied, and colored a little. And then she blurted out, in an oddly-ashamed way, "it was talking to you two dears that put it in my head. But I could not help thinking that moment that if one is ever good enough to get to heaven, one of the greatest pleasures will be to talk about our past memories and difficulties, and how the angels helped us! and, though you may laugh at me,"— they were doing nothing of the kind, only admiring her with all their might—"I have a kind of fancy that even my 'Trimmings, not Squails' episode may have a different look up there!"

"My dear," returned Nan, gently, for she loved all speeches of this sort, being a devout little soul and truly pious, "nothing was further from my thoughts than to laugh at you, for the more we think in this way the grander our work will appear to us. Mrs. Trimmings may be fat and vulgar, but when you were measuring her and answering her prettily—and I know how nicely you would speak, Phil—I think you were as brave as one of those knights—I cannot remember their names—who set out on some lofty quest or other!"

"I suppose the child means Sir Galhad," observed Phillis, with a groan at Nan's ignorance. "Oh, Nannie, I wish I could say,—

" 'My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure;' " and then she softly chanted,—for quotation never came amiss to her, and her head was crammed with choice selections from the poets,—

" 'All armed I ride, whate'er betide, Until I find the Holy Grail.' "

"Yes the Sangreal, or the Quest. It does not matter what, for it was only an allegory," returned Nan, who had plenty of ideas, only she confused them sometimes, and was not as clever in her definitions as Phillis. "It only meant that those grand old knights had some holy purpose and aim in their lives, for which they trained and toiled and fought. Don't you see?—the meaning is quite clear. We can have our Quest too."

"Bless her dear heart, if she is not travelling thousands of years and miles from Mrs. Trimmings!" exclaimed Phillis, who never could be serious long. "Well, Nannie, I understand you, though you are a trifle vague. We will have our Quest and our unattainable standard; and I will be your maiden knight—yours and Dulce's.

" 'How sweet are looks that ladies bend
On whom their favors fall!
For them I'll battle till the end,
To save from shame and thrall.' "

And when she had repeated this she rose, laughing, and said they were all a little demented; and what did they mean by wasting their time when there were three dresses to be cut out? and Dulce must have the work fixed for the sewing-machine.

For the next hour there was little talk, only the snipping sound of scissors and the rustling of silken breadths, and sometimes the swish and tearing of sundry materials, and then the whirring and burning and tappings of Dulce's sewing machine, like a dozen or two of woodpeckers at work on an iron tree. And no one quoted any more poetry, for prose was heaped up everywhere about them, and their heads were full of business.

But in the afternoon, when things were in progress and looked promising, and Mrs. Challoner had had her nap, and was busy over some sleeves that they had given her, to keep her quiet and satisfy her material conscience that she was helping her girls, Phillis did hear a little about Miss Drummond's visit. The sewing-machine, which they worked in turns, had stopped for a time, and they were all three round the table, sewing and fixing as busily as possible; and Phillis, remembering Sir Galahad, dared not say she was tired, only she looked out on the lengtheninig shadows with delight, and thought about tea and an evening walk just to stretch her cramped muscles. And if one day seemed so long, how would a week of days appear before the blessed Sunday gave them a few hours of freedom?

It was at this moment that Nan, with fine tact, broke the silence that was good for work, but was apt to wax drowsy in time:

"Miss Milner's dress is getting on well. How fast you two girls work, and mammie is doing the sleeves beautifully. Another afternoon you must let the work rest, mammie, and read to us, or Phillis will get restive. By the bye, Dulce, we have not told her a word about Miss Drummond's visit."

"No, indeed, was it not good of her to come so soon?" exclaimed Dulce. "She told us she wanted to be our first customer, and seemed quite disappointed when we said that we were bound in honor and mere gratitude to send Miss Milner's dress home first. 'Not that I am in a hurry for my dress, for nobody cares what I wear,' she said, quite cheerfully; 'but I wanted to be the first on your list. I wish we could oblige her, for she is a nice, unaffected little thing, and I am beginning to like her, though she is a little fussy."

"But she was as meek as a lamb about her dress," added Nan, who was a first-rate needle-woman, and could work rapidly while she talked. "Just fancy, Phil! she wanted to have a jacket with tabs and loose sleeves, just for comfort and coolness."

"Loose sleeves and a jacket!" almost gasped Phillis, for the princess skirts were then worn, and jackets were consigned to oblivion for the time being. "I hope you told her, Nan, that we had never worked for Mrs. Noah, neither had Mrs. Shem ever honored us by her custom."

"Well, no, Phillis; I was not quite so impertinent, and clever speeches of that sort never occur to me until you say them. But I told Miss Drummond that I could not consent to spoil her lovely dress in that way; and then she laughed, and owned she knew nothing about fashions, and that her sister Grace always ordered her clothes for her, because she chose such ugly things. She sat and chatted such a long time with us; she had only just gone when you came home."

"And she told us such a lot about this wonderful Grace," went on Dulce; "she says Archie quite worships her—Well, mammie," as Mrs. Challoner poised her needle in mid-air and regarded her youngest daughter with unfeigned astonishment. "I am only repeating Miss Drummond's words; she said, 'Archie.' "

"But, my dear, there was no need to be so literal," returned Mrs. Challoner, reprovingly; for she was a gentlewoman of the old school, and nothing grieved her more than shipshod English or any idiom or idiotcy of modern parlance in the mouths of her bright young daughters; to speak of any young man except Dick without the ceremonious prefix was a heinous misdemeanor in her eyes. Dulce would occasionally trespass, and was always rebuked with much gravity. "You could have said 'her brother, could you not?"

How Many Years Left?

If you want to know how many more years you are likely to live—according to the law of average, that is—study the following formula: Take the figure 80. Deduct your present age. Two-thirds of the result will equal the number of years you have to look forward to.

Let us suppose, for example, that you are 26. Take 26 from 80 and you have 54. Two-thirds of 54 equals 36, which is the answer.

Of course this formula is only approximate. It makes no allowance for people who are already over 80—and a man of 80 has still five years to his credit—nor does it differentiate between the sexes, but in comparing its results with the actual figures which have been worked out by statisticians it is very near the mark in all the ages between 10 and 70, though the ladies may take an additional couple of years, their expectation of life averaging two years more than that of men.—London Answers.

Moon Signs.

The moon plays an important part in sign telling. I know several old ladies who regulate all their household affairs, and even the conduct of life, by this luminary. All kinds of weather hang upon the changes of the moon. As a matter of fact, you and I rather like to see the new moon over the right shoulder. To be sure, we have no faith in the baneful influence of this sign. Still, it is just as well to be cautious about offending her ladyship. Farmers study the shape of the new moon to determine if the month is to be wet or dry. The Indians used to say that if you could hang a powder horn upon the curve of the new moon the month would be generally pleasant. A circle about the moon means a storm approaching. The number of stars within the circle tell the number of days which will elapse before the storm begins. Farmers tell about planting corn in the old of the moon.—Margaret Woodward in Countryside Magazine.

Reforming a King.

King Victor Emmanuel of Italy is extremely democratic, and it was the remark of a workingman that first led him to be so. Formerly he was very reserved and was not often to be found mixing among his people. One day, however, he granted a private audience to a prominent workman. His majesty discussed many subjects with his guest, including the latter's work in a glass factory.

At last the king hinted that he might visit the factory himself one day, to which the workman replied:

"Your people have been a very long time without seeing your face, sire—except on stamps."

The king did not say anything at the time, but he thought the man's words over very carefully, and henceforth no Italians had cause for complaint that his majesty kept himself aloof from them in the seclusion of his palace.

Swiss Have Mercantile Navy.

Long before Germany was to be reckoned with as a sea power Switzerland possessed a fleet equipped for warfare. Eight hundred years ago on all the larger Swiss lakes armed galleys were maintained by the rival cantons. Skilled shipwrights had to be imported from Genoa for the construction of these vessels, some of which carried crews of 500 men. The largest Swiss flotilla was maintained on the lake of Geneva when the inhabitants of Geneva were at war with Savoy. Since the neutrality of Switzerland has been guaranteed by the powers there has been no need for warships on the lakes. The Swiss, however, possess a mercantile navy, which carries a considerable amount of trade over the 342 miles of navigable waterways in the republic.—London Spectator.

What She Had She'd Hold.

It was the happiest moment of their lives. He had just proposed, and she had grab—er—accepted him.

Then he took a tiny leather case from his pocket and slipped a sparkling circlet on her finger, while she beamed with pride.

"I'm afraid it's rather loose, darling," he murmured. "Shall I take it back and have it made smaller?"

The damsel shook her head decidedly.

"No, Rupert," she said calmly. "An engagement ring is an engagement ring, even if I have to wear it around my neck."—London Telegraph.

The Other Way.

A compositor once set up the word "doughnut" so that it read "donut."

"Don't you know how to spell better than that?" asked the foreman.

"Well," said the compositor thoughtfully, "do you know it didn't look just right to me. I had a 'w' in there once and took it out."—Kansas City Star.

Distressed Him.

"You called me a boneheaded jellyfish!"

"Yes."

"Well, I don't care about your opinion; but, for heaven's sake, don't mix your metaphors!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Woman's Prerogative.

"Willie, did you see my new shaving brush?"

"Yep; mom is using it to repaint the birdcage."—Columbia Jester.

BETTER CLOTHES

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Ackerill says in The Intelligencer of August 3rd:—

"Regarding the intermediate state, all those diligently reading the scriptures must know and realize that we cannot get anything but a very hazy idea of it from the Old Testament scriptures because God's ancient people, the Jews, were divided into two parties on the subject—the Pharisees, who believed in an intermediate state and a resurrection from the dead, and the Saducees who did not."

I am surprised to find that anyone having such an intimate acquaintance with the Bible as Mr. Ackerill seems to possess would take the position he does in the above. Now let us examine this statement and see if it is worthy of acceptance by those who are seeking for the truth in matters of theology. Mr. Ackerill says the Old Testament is "very hazy" regarding the intermediate state. The proof of this is because "the Jews were divided into two parties on the subject." I fail to see how the division of the Jews on this subject should demonstrate the haziness of the Old Testament in reference to this or any other subject. The Jews as a nation were not theologians, but of course were divided into several religious sects, but if that were a proof of the haziness of the Old Testament we must conclude that the New Testament is more obscure than the Old, considering the fact that there are probably now, since the New Testament became accessable to the masses, fifty times as many divisions and sects as there were in Old Testament times.

But the "Pharisees believed in an intermediate state." This to my mind is evidence against the truthfulness of that doctrine, for Christ warned His disciples against the "doctrine" of the Pharisees as well as that of the Saducees, (Matt. xvi:6-12.) The quotations in my previous letter were in my humble opinion anything but vague although most of them were from the Old Testament. They were, moreover, the language of inspiration through God's prophets and were exceedingly pointed in reference to the matters to which they were applied; and this, I have no doubt, is why Mr. Ackerill has left them severely alone—not having attempted to weaken the force of even one of them.

But Mr. Ackerill finds that "the heathen nations had a better idea of the intermediate state than the Jews." I judge from this that instead of sending Christian missionaries to teach the heathen it would be better for us to learn of those benighted peoples, especially as to the intermediate state. This is to my mind the only conclusion deducible from Mr. Ackerill's statement.

Mr. Ackerill continues: "We must look to the New Testament for a correct understanding of the subject, and the parable of Dives and Lazarus will suffice." This parable may be quite ample to satisfy Mr. Ackerill, on the principle that a drowning man will catch at a straw but the writer would not feel warranted in basing an important doctrine on a parable, and no great commentator or theologian would do so. What is a parable? The Century Dictionary gives as the specific meanings: An allegorical relation or representation; a species of fable; a proverb, etc. Therefore it was necessary for Christ to explain parables sometimes, even to His disciples. But unto others He spoke in parables: that though they have eyes they may not see, and though they have ears, they may not understand. (Luke vii:9,10)—Twentieth Century New Testament. The disciples asked their Lord to explain the parable of the sower, and in doing so he instructed them that the seed is (represents) the word of God. Those (the seed that fell by the wayside) represent they that hear, etc.

It will be seen, then, that parables are not intended to be understood in a literal sense. And in keeping with this, Young, in his concordance, under the head Lazarus (Luke 16) says it is "a symbolical name in one of the parables." Now the rich man died and was buried, and in hades (where he was buried) he lifted up his eyes being in torments." Or, as it reads in the Twentieth Century Testament, commencing with verse 22:—"After a time the beggar died, and was taken by the angels (messengers) to be with Abraham. The rich man also died and was buried. In the Place of Death (hades) he looked up in his torment and saw Abraham at a distance and Lazarus at his side. So he called out, Pity me, Father Abraham, and send Lazarus to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue for I am suffering agony in this flame. Child, answered Abraham, remember that you in your lifetime (he was evidently not living then) received what you thought was desirable, just as Lazarus received what was not desirable," etc. The characters in this parable, or fable, were literally dead, but for a certain purpose were represented as conversing. They were evidently corporal beings. They had lived, but had "died," and the rich man, we are told, was buried: "In the place of death," (hades, the place of burial) he "lifted up his eyes." The rich man had "eyes" and a "tongue." Lazarus had fingers, and there was water at hand, and to go from this place was to "go from the dead"; and if Lazarus had gone to testify unto the "five brethren" it would have been necessary for him to "rise from the dead." Departed spirits" could have passed over the "great gulf", but material beings like Lazarus and Dives could not. There is nothing in the whole story about departed spirits or souls. The parable was probably in harmony with the belief of some one or more of the unchristian sects at the time.

But perhaps some one may say, how could dead bodies talk? They did not actually talk, but were represented as doing so for the purpose of the parable just as is represented in Isaiah xiv in reference to the King of Babylon. In this same chapter the fir trees are said to rejoice, and the cedars of Lebanon, "saying, since thou art laid down no feller is come up against us." Trees besides talking are also represented as clapping their hands (Isaiah lv:12); also the floods can clap their hands (Psalm xcviii:8). When we find such representations as these in the Word of God, need we wonder at Christ, for a good purpose, parabolically representing dead bodies as being engaged in conversation?

It seems to me that Mr. Ackerill and Mr. Perry will have to bring forward more forceful evidence than the parable of the rich man and Lazarus to prove that human beings can be literally alive after they have died, or dead and alive at the same time. If they are alive after having died why should Paul be so very anxious to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead"? (Phil. iii:7-11). If the Old Testament is so "very hazy," as Mr. Ackerill says, how could Paul, in writing to Timothy say "they (the Old Testament scriptures) are able to make thee wise unto salvation"—II Tim. iii:15. Mr. Ackerill should bring forward the passage in reference to the Spirits in Prison and see how that will work out.

BY THE SEASHORE

A holiday by the seashore is the form of vacation most appreciated by thousands of people from the inland centres. Portland and its environs abound with attractions to suit all tastes, from the quiet retirement of Cape Elizabeth and Cushings Island to Old Orchard and Kennebunk, popular chiefly for their beaches and surf bathing. "Mountains of New England and the Sea." just issued by the Grand Trunk Railway System contains full information, complete list of hotels and boarding houses, etc., and may be had on application to C. What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

BELLEVILLE

Major Barragar, of the staff of the Provisional School of Infantry, is principal of St. Mary's school in Belleville and had twenty-four of his pupils write on the recent Entrance examinations. Of the twenty-four twenty-two passed, four with honors and one won the Governor General's Gold Medal. The same methods in use at the school have been used with the officers of the Provincial School of Infantry, and every one of the officers will give the opinion that there are few, if any officers on the Instructional Cadre better able to give lectures in an interesting manner.—Kingston Whig.

KINGSTON

The following Kingston graduates were mentioned in General Sir Ian Hamilton's despatches:— Lieutenant-Colonel A. C. Joly de Lothiniere of the Royal Engineers; Major-Gen. W. M. Bridges who has since died of wounds, and Lieut.-Col. H. C. Smith, of the Second Hampshires, who has been killed in action. Second Lieut. John Laxon Sweet, who was killed near Givenche on June 16th, was in Canada at the outbreak of the war. He enlisted in the 48th Highlanders and was given a commission in March in the Second Royal Scots Fusiliers.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Four recruits for the 59th arrived in camp from Belleville on Saturday. Twenty recruits were received by the 59th from Port Hope. Lieut. Rogers of the 8th C.M.R. brought 10 recruits from Belleville.

The 8th C.M.R. now has 637 men all told in its ranks, which is really 62 over the establishment. When the draft leaves there will be 12 over the allowed strength of the regiment.

A board of officers composed as under will assemble at Barriefield Camp for the purpose of conducting examinations in port'on "A." in connection with provisional school of infantry:—President, Major W. J. Brown, G. S. O. 3rd Division; Members, Major D. Barragar, 15th Regiment; Major G. H. Gillespie, I. &O. of O.C. 3rd Division.

REV. A. M. HUBLY

The congregation of Emmanuel Church were greatly pleased to welcome back yesterday their minister, Rev. A. M. Hubly, who preached for the first time since his illness. Mr. Hubly underwent a most serious operation at Roosevelt Hospital, and the entire church rejoiced to see him once more conduct the service.

SOME CHEEK!

Gilbert J. Roonen, of Toronto, blew into Belleville some time yesterday on his motor-cycle. Evidently he did not think much of our roads, because he took the sidewalk in front of the police station, and followed it for a block. Constable Thompson accepted the challenge and sprinted after Roonen, bringing him back with him. As it was necessary for the cyclist to be in Toronto to-day, he left $5 with Chief Newton, pleading guilty to the offense.

A FAREWELL PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. William Burd, Jr., entertained a number of their friends and relations at their home 70 Pine street, in honor of the latter's brother, Trumpeter Burd, who is about to leave for overseas with the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles of Kingston. The evening was spent in games and card playing. About midnight lunch was served and the party, after wishing the young soldier God speed and a safe return, left for their homes, all having spent an enjoyable evening.

CADETS SIGNALLING CERTIFICATES

The Milita Department Certificates of qualification issued to those who were successful in passing the recent examination in signalling, will be presented by Colonel Ponton to the winners at the Patriotic Recruiting Meeting to be held in Queen Victoria School, Pine street, to-morrow, Tuesday evening. It is hoped that as many as possible of these 15 representative cadets will be present. Their names appeared in a recent issue of this paper.

DR. J. J. ROBERTSON ACCUSED

There is surely something in the air in Preston and its twin sister Galt or else a couple of auto license numbers in Tweed have the misfortune to have doubles. Several days ago Mr. Mouck was summoned to Preston, to answer to a charge of running his auto in that town without the regulation lights. The charge was unfounded. Now, it seems that Dr. J. J. Robertson has been making a tour of the country and, passing through the picturesque town of Galt, was touching the high spots only, which is contrary to law and he received a summons Thursday morning to appear at Galt on August 4th to answer to a charge of exceeding the speed limit. Wouldn't that stagger you? The rapidity with which these charges are coming to Tweed would lead one to believe that the "official spotters" of Preston and Galt are cheating the funny house or else their optics require repairing. Dr. Robertson exceeding the speed limit—think of it. Why, we have witnessed him racing with the Stork till his little Ford was not allowed to go any faster than it should. The doctor declares he was not in Galt on Monday, July 26th and he will fight the charge to a [illegible] finish.— Advocate.

Cowan Co. Ltd. Offer Practical Aid to Recruiting

In the works of the Cowan Company, Limited, manufacturers of chocolat and cocoa, the following notice to employes has been exhibited: "To all in our employ who enlist for service abroad we agree to pay the full wages of married men from the time they leave Canada until their return. To pay half-wages to unmarried men from the time they leave Canada until they return.' This offer constitutes a practical aid to recruiting. It assures the unmarried man that sufficient moneys will be turned over to his relatives to maintain perhaps a widowed mother during his absence, and to the married man, that his family will not suffer want on account of his accepting the call of his country.

The Amateur as Bootmaker.

In the early days when Tolstoy adopted manual labor as a religious duty he took lessons in bootmaking to occupy him during the long winter evenings. He was at work diligently hammering the wooden pegs into the red sole, an art he had just mastered, says the "Reminiscences of Tolstoy," by his son, when Prince Obolenski came in.

"Look, isn't that grand?" said my father exultantly, holding out his work for the visitor to see.

"It doesn't seem so very difficult," said Obolenski, half in joke.

"Well, you try!"

"Right you are!"

"Very good, but on one condition—every peg you drive in I'll pay you a rouble, and every one you break you'll pay me 10 copecks. Agreed?"

Obolenski took the boot, awl and hammer and broke eight pegs, one after the other; then he laughed with his good humored laugh and amid general hilarity paid 80 copecks, which went to the shoemaker.

Napoleon Used Milton's Tactics.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is not the first English author whose writings have been studied for hostile ends by his country's enemies. Napoleon assured Sir Colin Campbell at Elba that he greatly admired "Paradise Lost" and had read it to some purpose. The plan of Austerlitz was borrowed from book 6 of that work, where Satan brings his artillery to bear upon Michael and his angelic host with such direful effect:

Training his devilish enginery, impaled
On every side with shadowy squadrons deep,
To hide the fraud.

This mode of warfare appeared to Napoleon so likely to succeed if applied to actual use that he determined upon its adoption and succeeded beyond his expectations. By reference to the details of the battle of Austerlitz it will be found to assimilate so completely with Milton's imaginary fight as to bear out the emperor's assertion.—London Chronicle.

Why Men Eat More Food Than Women.

That men eat 5 or 6 per cent more than women—not because they are gluttons, but because they actually require that much more nourishment—appears as a result of an investigation made in the nutrition laboratory of the Carnegie institute at Washington by Francis G. Benedict and L. E. Eames, says the Literary Digest. The reason for the discrepancy seems to be that women have a smaller proportion of active tissue than men of the same weight and more inactive material, such as fat. The investigation disclosed that the average woman generates only 1,355 heat units in the twenty-four hours as against 1,638 produced by the man, or about 2 per cent more for the latter per pound of body weight. When groups were compared after careful selection of individuals of nearly the same height and weight the men were found to produce about 12 per cent more heat than women.

Marriage Superstitions.

In some parts of Germany the duties of the bridesmaids are tinged with superstition. It is one of their duties on the morning of the marriage day to carry to the bride a myrtle wreath, for which they had subscribed on the previous evening. This they place on her head and at night remove it, when it is placed in the bride's hand, she being at the time blindfolded. The bridesmaids then dance round her, while she endeavors to place the wreath on one of their heads. Whoever is fortunate enough to be thus decorated will, it is believed, be a wife before another year has passed. In removing the bridal wreath and veil the bridesmaids are careful to throw away every pin or the bride will be overtaken by misfortune, while any unwary bridesmaid who retains one will lessen her chances of marriage.—Dundee Advertiser.

The Meteoric Hypothesis.

The nebular hypothesis of La Place has been abandoned in favor of the meteoric hypothesis of Lockyer and planitesmal hypothesis of Chamberlain. All suns, planets and moons, by these two nearly identical theories, were made by the falling in from space of small cosmical bodies, such as the meteors now falling on the earth.

Trillions of years ago there was a meteor moving in space. It is now in the center of the earth. Another meteor joined this by collision, then another, and this falling in is now going on at a vastly diminished rate, so that comparatively few are now coming in, as may be seen on almost any clear night.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

White Man's Graveyard.

Africa is a remarkably beautiful country. Its coast lines are picturesque, graceful, fascinating, alluring. Its seaport towns and cities are usually pretty and reasonably healthful. Equatorial Africa has, until the last two decades, been called the white man's graveyard, but clean living, quinine, mosquito netting, sobriety and sanitary improvements have made Africa a place where one can not only exist, but live in as much comfort, take it all in all during the year, as in the city of New York.—New York Telegram.

Stale Candy.

Stale candy can generally be worked over by reboiling. In the case of acid candies, such as lemon drops, the candy is boiled, the acid is withdrawn by the use of lime or chalk, and the sirup may then be used in the manufacture of that or any other species of candy.

Taking Up Time.

"I like to have my friends extend their congratulations," said the newly appointed public official.

"Yes?"

"But that last caller extended his over an hour and a half."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Refined It.

"Here's a dealer advertises a sale of hereditary mahogany furniture."

"Just what does he mean by that?"

"That's merely a polite way of saying secondhand."—Pittsburgh Post.

Inefficient Management.

Smythe (dismally) — Nell, I simply can't meet my creditors. Mrs. Smythe—Why should you? What in the world do you employ a secretary for?—Puck.

Setting a Veritable Record.

"I don't like him. He's as unreliable as the weather."

"As the weather predictions, you mean."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The fruit derived from labor is the sweetest of pleasures.—Vauvenargues.

The Glad Hand.

We are not isolated units in this universe of ours. We are all of us members of a great world community. All of us are so constituted that our welfare and our happiness depend on the maintenance of good will with others.

To a great extent, however, we always have it in our power to determine just what the attitude of others toward us shall be.

We have this power by virtue of the fact that the human mind tends to be swayed in its critical judgments by the character of the emotional moods experienced. People usually think exactly as they feel.

Hence the value of the glad hand.

The cordial greeting, the cheery smile, the display of genuine interest—all these help to create pleasurable moods in other persons, and consequently prepossess them in our favor.

Whereas the cold, indifferent approach, the flabby handshake and the languid air arouse feelings of antagonism, if not of suspicion and aversion.—H. Addington Bruce in Kansas City Star.

Perfect Pitch.

A fairly large number of people are gifted with a good ear for music, and their friends think it quite wonderful that they are able to play or whistle tunes which they have heard only once.

But this gift, however remarkable it may seem, is by no means extraordinary or exceptional, especially when compared with the possession of what is called an "ear of absolute pitch." This means that the person possessing it is able to stand away from the piano and tell you what note you are playing or in what key. One well known lady pianist is able to read over the score of a piece of music in the train or omnibus, leave the book behind her and yet play the whole piece through by memory when she reaches home.

Perfect pitch is a gift to some people, but it can be acquired. Indeed, many authorities say that to be a really great musician this power must be possessed.—London Answers.

Signatures and Signs.

Walter Crane's signature—a crane impaled on a W—reminds us that other English artists have adopted queer "beasties" to form their signature. There was Richard Doyle, for instance, who among his friends and in his signature pretended only to be "Dicky," for you will find in the corner of many of his Punch drawings a "D" with a very perky looking bird standing thereon. But Whistler's was the most famous, though somewhat incongruous. His sign manual often took the shape of a butterfly, though a wasp would have expressed him better, for he was not only an artist, but the author of "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies." And there are many who cherish envelopes from Professor Blackie with the Greek scrawl meaning "Tell the truth in love."—London Spectator.

A Land Without Flies.

It should be refreshing and a bit encouraging to the fatigued, hopeless fly fighters to know that there is in the world a country in which there are no flies. The place is the British West Indies. This interesting fact—that there are no flies in British West Indies—starts up a number of questions and curious conjectures. Why is it that they have no flies? Is it that they have lost the seed, or is it that they have some active parasite or animal that feeds on flies, like the South American ant eater, for instance? Certainly it is not that they have no filth. They have heat and moisture, and, if rumor has it true, they have all the filth that is necessary. That these three conditions can exist without any flies is what we do not understand.—North Carolina Health Board Report.

Vol. 48 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, TUESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1915. No 377

PINNACLE ST. PAVEMENT PASSED BY COUNCIL

By-Law Carried by Seven to One—Ald Wallbridge Vigorously Opposed Expenditure—City Near Limit of Borrowing Powers

The Belleville City Council came to a final decision last night on the question of paving Pinnacle Street, about which there has been so much discussion. The bylaw providing for the pavement of the street was passed through the third reading, only Ald. Wallbridge voting against it. There was a small attendance of members, those present being Mayor W. H. Panter, Alds. C. F. Wallbridge, W. A. Woodley, E. O. Platt, W. S. Smith, J. A. St. Charles, Allan McFee and H. C. Earle.

Before the ordinary business of the Council the Mayor called upon anyone who wished to address the Council to do so.

Mr. Carnew said he represented a property owner in Pinnacle Street, who was unable to be present, who wished to know whether it was the intention of the Council to advertise for tenders for the paving of Pinnacle Street.

The Mayor—It is the intention of the Council to advertise for tenders.

Mr. C. Wills said he understood the petition emanated from people who expected to get the contract, and he came to see what was being done—whether there was a sufficient number of property owners of Pinnacle Street anxious to have the work done. He wanted to see whether the Council was going ahead with the work. Personally he did not think it was an opportune time.

On the suggestion of the Mayor, the Clerk read the list of names of property owners who had signed the petition, and certified that the number was sufficient.

Mr. O'Flynn reported that the petition was sent back to be corrected under the solicitor's instructions and presented to the Clerk if it was correct. The Solicitor advised them to guard against two matters—to see what position the G.T.R. would take: and to see that the debentures were not put on the market so as to injure the credit of the city. He went to Montreal, and had since received from the engineer of the G. T. R. information to the effect that they would plank between the rails and outside to the end of the ties, and would pay $800 towards the rest of the paving. But that would have to be confirmed by the company. With regard to the suggestion that the work should be left over until next year, Mr. Burgoyne preferred that the paving should be done this year if it was possible.

Upon the question coming on later, the City Engineer recommended paving the whole of Pinnacle Street between the south side of the Market and Bridge Street, with the exception of the G.T.R. track. He estimated the total cost at $13,219.40. The street intersections and the street in front of the Market, together with the frontage of the Public Library would cost $2,065.20, which was included in the above.

Ald. St. Charles moved the second reading of the bylaw for paving Pinnacle Street with Trinidad asphalt which was seconded by Ald. Woodley.

Ald. Wallbridge entered a vigorous protest. "As Chairman of the Executive Committee," he said, "I think the passing of these bylaws for constructive work is going to entail a great deal of hardship upon a great many citizens. The assessment has been slightly increased, but the amount of our expenditure has increased considerably, and consequently the tax rate has increased. The assessor has made the statement that next year he does not think the assessment will be increased, but the expenditure is bound to increase next year. Consequently there will be an increase in taxation, and the one mill the Government put on will come on next year. If these pavements were absolutely necessary (and we know one is not) we might be justified in going to the expense. The tax rate is higher perhaps than it ever was. The assessment has been increased every year until this year. There is not the building going on that there has been and there are a lot of vacant houses upon which the assessment has been reduced. Landlords have a great difficulty in getting their rents. You can go on with this work and get the debentures sold at par, but the expenditure will go on. I personally am opposed to adding that additional expenditure at the present time. If conditions were favorable, and work at the factories was going on it would be all right; but anybody who is in business and employs laborers knows the laborer and the mechanic are not working full time."

Ald. Wallbridge went on to say that as far as Pinnacle Street was concerned the frontage property would take practically the whole amount; but there was a large portion in front of the Market Square and Corby Library and several inter-sections which property owners would not pay for, and the rest of the city would have to bear a portion of that extra tax. "The borrowing powers of the city are almost exhausted," he remarked, "and before the end of the year your entire assets will be wiped out, and I shall be surprised if there is not an overdraft. If it was absolutely necessary I would add my share to it, but under the circumstances I cannot."

"What Ald. Wallbridge said is true," observed the Mayor. "We have reached almost the bounds of our borrowing powers. But these pavements are paid for by the residents, and it will be an aid to the people, because we cannot spend any more money out of current income. The people who are petitioning for these pavements bind themselves to provide the money and pledge themselves to take up the bonds. As far as the city is concerned I don't think the amount the city will have to pay will amount to what we have had to spend every year on repairs; and the condition of that street is nothing to be proud of. I think the Council is pursuing a wise course in going on with the work, especially as it is the ratepayers who are taking the initiative. The Council decided it would not take the initiative, but that if people came forward and asked for the work at their exclusive cost they would do it."

"I think it is about time the people woke up to the question of some kind of paving," put in Ald. Woodley. "It has taken about $1,100 a year to keep Front Street in repair. That was misspent money, but now the street is in a good condition. Pinnacle Street is nothing but a mud hole. I think with the G.T.R. intimating that they will give $800 and fill up the rails, so that the street will have a presentable appearance, that we should do the work. It will give employment to some of our workmen."

The second reading was then carried by seven votes to one, and the third reading was passed by the same majority, Ald. Wallbridge being the only member to vote against it.

Ald. St. Charles moved "That the construction of the paving of Pinnacle Street be conditional on the G.T.R. confirming the letter sent to Mr. O'Flynn by Mr. Donald," and this was carried.

On the motion of Ald. St. Charles it was carried that tenders be called for the construction of Trinidad asphalt paving on Pinnacle Street, such tenders to be in by August 26.

Allies Progress In Dardanelles

Resume Attacks on Turkish Positions with Great Vigor —Advance 200 Yards

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 10.—A despatch from Athens says the Allies have resumed their attacks on the Turkish positions in the Dardanelles with great vigor, during the past two days, and have made sensible progress on the Gallipoli Peninsula. The Turkish losses have been heavy. Simultaneously the allied fleet bombarded the Turkish positions on the Dardanelles, inflicting severe damage to their defences.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—It is officially announced here today that the Allies advanced in the Dardanelles two hundred yards along a front of three hundred yards. A footing has also been gained on Chunuck Bahr and another landing effected elsewhere.

GERMANS LOSE 65,000 MEN IN KILLED, WOUNDED

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A despatch from Petrograd says the first steps have been taken for the evacuation of Vilna, 55 miles southeast of Kovno, public institutions and the contents of libraries and museums having been removed. German aeroplanes have been bombarding the railway to the south.

(Canadian Press Special)

GENEVA, Aug. 10.—A despatch from Innsbruck to the Tribune says in the recent fighting along a section of the eastern front from Ostrov to the Pissa River, northeast of Warsaw, the Germans lost 65,000 killed and wounded, but succeeded in capturing the principal fortified positions of the Russians.

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 10.—In the British Press today one finds only sarcasm for Germay's reported peace overtures, as all the papers repeat that the officials have so often insisted that there can be no peace until the Allies have triumphed.

Wife Must Let You go, Says Militia Dep't

New Order Abolishes Need of Consent of Wives and Parents to Enlistment

OTTAWA, Aug. 9.—According to official announcement by Senator Lougheed, Acting Minister of Militia, "My wife won't let me" will no longer be a barrier to would-be recruits in Canada. It has been decided that the regulation requiring married men to obtain the consent of their wives and single men between the ages of 18 and 21 the consent of parents or guardians should be abolished, and a militia order to that effect will be promulgated. The order will also wipe out the provision that enabled a man in the overseas forces to purchase his discharge for $15.

British Retake Lost Trenches

LONDON, Aug. 9—Sir John French, Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in France, reports that the lost trenches at Hooge, east of Ypres, in Belgium, have been retaken by the British troops, and that they have advanced on a front of 1,200 yards.

The statement of Field Marshal French says:—

'Since my communication of August 1 the artillery on both sides has been active north and south of Ypres. In these exchanges the advantage has been with us.

"This morning, after a successful artillery bombardment, in which the French on our left co-operated effectively, we attacked the trenches at Hooge captured by the enemy on July 30. These were all retaken, and, following up this success, we made further progress north and west of Hooge extending the front of the trenches captured to 1,200 yards.

"During this fighting our artillery shelled a German train, at Langemarck (five miles northeast of Ypres), derailing and setting fire to five tracks.

"The captures reported amounted to three officers and 124 men of other ranks and two machine guns."

FIFTEEN-HOUR BATTLE WON BY THE ITALIANS

Austrians Retreat Into Gorizia, Leaving 2,000 Dead on Field—Italians Gain Important Strategic Point—Austrians Lose Heavily

(Canadian Press Special)

GENEVA, Aug. 10—Austrian troops to the number of 30,000, released from the Russian campaign, have appeared on the Italian front with artillery sufficient for two army corps. Yesterday they attacked the Italians outside of Gorizia, according to a Tribune despatch from Laibach.

The Italians brought up additional artillery and after a battle lasting fifteen hours forced the Austrians to retreat into Gorizia, leaving two thousand dead on the field.

The Italians are said to have gained an important strategic point by joining forces between Romans and Doberdo, south of Gradisca, and the Austrians lost heavily in a vain effort to prevent this junction.

The bombardment of Roverto continues.

Japan Actively Helping Russia

Mikado's Government Sends Many Big Guns to Aid the Allies

TOKIO, Aug. 9.—Now that the danger of war with China is over all Japan and Korea is engaged in making supplies for Russia and her allies. The war brought big financial losses to Japan, but the gaps are being filled in part by the furnishing of guns, ammunition and general necessities to the armies at the front—particularly the armies of Russia.

Officially, Japan has given increased practical expression to her friendship towards Russia by going to the limit of dismantling some of her fortifications on the north-eastern coast of the empire. Big coast guns stripped from these fortifications have been shipped to Vladivostok and thence forwarded to Galicia to strengthen the big gun artillery of the armies of the Czar.

Foreigners who visit Japan are especially astonished at the almost limitless number of tiny shops in the big cities of this nation—miles upon miles of streets filled with them—all occupied in making something when they are not selling something. These shops are not really the factories of the empire. It is here that cloth goods and innumerable articles needed to keep huge armies in supplies are turned out handed over to commission merchants assembled in great quantities and distributed to Russia, France and even England. The correspondent of the Associated Press is informed by a reliable authority that practically every household in Korea is hard at work making cloth for Russia. It is sent to Moscow and other points and manufactured into uniforms, blankets, coverings and wrappings.

Boots Made in Korea.

Korea, also, is making big quantities of boots and ammunition cases. Major Papowski and another Russian officer have just arrived at Seoul to take over the fourth consignment of orders manufactured by a tanning company near Seoul, and consisting of 40,000 pairs of boots and 30,000 ammunition cases.

The Japan Celluloid Company at Aboshi, near Kobe, has abandoned temporarily, the celluloid business for a more profitable business of making explosives. This company recently received an order from the Russian Government for 440 tons of guncotton to be delivered before the end of the year. A test of the explosives having proved satisfactory, the first instalment, consisting of 15 tons, was despatched to Petrograd.

FRENCH AIR FLEET'S SUCCESSFUL FLIGHT

Raid Saarbrucken and Drop 164 Shells on Station and Factories —Germans Use Shells Containing Asphyxiating Gas

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 10.—(Afternoon official statement.) In Artois, north of the Souchez railway station the Germans last night delivered two attacks in which they made use of bombs. They were driven back to their trenches by our fire. In the Argonne in the eastern part of the forest, last night witnessed a cannonade and rifle firing, but with no infantry engagements. There was also fighting with bombs and hand grenades at Vauquois.

In the forest of Leprene the enemy, after a violent bombardment, attacked at about eight o'clock last night our trenches in the vicinity of Lacroix des Carmes, but were checked by a curtain of fire from the French troops.

During the night a further attack, accompanied by a bombardment of shells containing asphyxiating gas also was checked by our artillery.

In Lorraine a reconnaissance made by the enemy against the station and mill at Moncel was easily exhausted. The night passed quietly in the Vosges.

FRENCH AERIAL RAID.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—An aerial attack on Saarbrucken, northeast of Metz, was successfully carried out by a French aerial squadron this morning, the war office at Paris announced tonight. The following is the official report:—

"This morning an air squadron, consisting of 32 bombarding aeroplanes, convoyed by some scout speed planes, sallied forth to bombard the station and factories of Saarbrucken (northeast of Metz). The atmospheric conditions were not favorable, the valleys being concealed under fog and the sky cloudy.

'Notwithstanding difficulties attending the steering of the aircraft, 28 aeroplanes reached their goal and dropped 164 shells of various calibres. The speed planes meanwhile were keeping away the German aviators, who were attempting to cut off the squadron from its base.

"Many fires were observed in the territory shelled."

Militia Promotions

Lieut.-Col. Meighen Granted Temporary Rank of Colonel

OTTAWA, Aug. 9.— Sir Charles Ross, president of the Ross Rifle Co., has been given the temporary rank of colonel in the Canadian Militia according to military orders just issued.

Lieut-Col. F. S. Meighen of the Grenadier Guards, who recently returned to Montreal from the front and is now engaged in instructional work in Canada has been granted the temporary rank of full colonel, which it is expected will shortly be made permanent.

Glen Campbell, ex-M.P., who is now engaged in raising a regiment in Manitoba, has been appointed major.

Dr. . W. S. McCullouugh, chief medical health officer of Ontario, has been given the temporary rank of major while in charge of the canitation at the Niagara military camp.

Members of the shell committee and of the party accompanying Mr. D. A. Thomas, Lloyd-George's agent of munitions in Canada, have returned from their visit to Montreal and the maritime provinces, where they inspected factories which are turning out shells. Mr. Thomas himself has gone to New York, but is expected to return tomorrow. The party will leave in a few days to visit factories in Ontario and the west. They expressed themselves as well satisfied with the manner in which Canadian manufacturers are responding to the call for munitions.

One company of the 73rd Royal Highlanders of Montreal is to be recruited in Ottawa and preparations are already being made for the enlistment of the men, which will start in about ten days.

Already three officers of the new battalion have been selected from Ottawa Major H. C. Sparling, the second in command, comes from this city, and Lieut. P. Armstrong and Lieut. H. Armstrong of Ottawa have also been posted with this unit. Pipe Major Allan Saunders, of the Otawa pipe band, has been appointed pipe major of the pipe band which the battalion will have as well as a bugle and drum band. It is expected there will be little difficulty in getting recruits for the Scottish corps, as there are many sons of the heather in the capital who would prefer to fight in kilts.

RUSSIAN DANGER PAST, ENEMY IS WEAKENING

LONDON, Aug. 9.The situation on the eastern front is decidedly less critical, an optimistic tone pervading military circles here. The Russians have strengthened their position in the Baltic provinces, and the danger there is less menacing.

The retirement of the Russian armies from the Warsaw front has so far encountered no serious obstacle. Despite the bossing of the enemy, there is little to show for the costly drive eastward of the Austro-German forces, the Austrians estimating their total bag in southern Poland at 8,000 prisoners only.

The Germans are still pounding at the outer defences of Ossowetz, Kovno and Novo Georgievsk, their offensive being concentrated chiefly on the Narew line.

The latest Russian official report declares that the German attacks on the western front of Kovno were repulsed with enormous losses.

Praga, the suburb of Warsaw, on the right bank of the Vistula, has been taken, and the enemy is pushing through on the heels of the retiring Russians.

On the Dniester River the Russian offensive has been resumed.

HAD GLORIOUS TIME AT THE HANGING

STARKVILLE, Miss., Aug. 9.—While 500 farmers, whites and blacks, their wives, children and employes ate watermelon and picnic lunches, sang hymns and listened to the speeches of political candidates, two negroes, Dick Seals and Peter Bolen, accused of murdering a railroad porter, were hung here to-day. The affair, which had been extensively advertised, partook of the nature of an old-fashioned barbecue, at which everybody present had a good time.

The great majority of the immense crowd came here yesterday in order to get front seats at the hanging, but when several thousand more arrived this morning there was a grand scramble for places. The proceedings were started at the free distribution of sandwiches and lemonade, after which several candidates for office at the approaching county primaries took the platform, or rather the gallows, and delivered themselves of their best oratorical efforts. At times the applause was deafening, the condemned negroes all the while occupying places to the rear of the speakers and joining in the appreciation of the latter's remarks.

As the time for the excutions arrived, ministers ascended the scaffold and took their places beside the negroes. Rev. Mr. Winbush invoked the Lord's blessing, in which the murderers joined, and then the hymn, "There is a Land of Pure Delight Where Saints Immortal Reign," was sung with great gusto. Every one of the 5,000 present, even including the two negro murderers, yelled the last lines at the top of their lungs, "Not Jordan's stream nor death's cold flood should frighten from the shore."

Last night the condemned men ate several large watermelons with relish, in addition to other delicacies which had been sent them by friends.

The dual hanging had been arranged by authorities with an eye to the spectacular. The spot selected resembled a natural amphitheatre with sloping sides, in the centre of which stood the gallows. Many of the spectators looked upon the instrument of death with awe but the majority ofthose who had come long distances to see the spectacle felt never a quiver until the traps actually were sprung.

Victoria Avenue To be Well Paved

City Council Last Night Decided to Pave Street With Rocmac

The principal business before the City Council last night was the passing of bylaws for paving Pinnacle Street and Victoria Avenue. The discussion on Pinnacle Street will be found in another column. The members present were Mayor W. H. Panter, Alds. C. F. Wallbridge, W. A. Woodley, E. O. Platt, W. S. Smith, J. O. St. Charles, Allan McFee and H. C. Earle.

The following letter was read from the Rocmac Roads, Ltd., and signed by E. D. Gray:—

Gentlemen,—I have been authorised to state on behalf of my company that it is behind the tender of W. H. Patterson for the construction of Rocmac pavement on Victoria Avenue. The price of $1 per square yard is a cost figured by our engineer, John Sears, will permit of the work being done in the very best manner with a conservative profit in this, Mr. Patterson's first job with us. Providing you see fit to give him this work Mr. Patterson has agreed to build the road under the supervision of our engineers. This is practically having the work constructed directly by our company, and in such case we will furnish you with a three-year guarantee bond with the U. S. Fidelity and Guarantee Co., guaranteeing to turn the road over to you in perfect shape at the end of three years, with the exception of a reasonable abrasion on the stone surface, and of course any holes cut by the city for gas, water, etc., during that period.

I would also state that the Rocmac Co. is prepared to take at par your three year bonds, such as the Asphalt Co. offers to do on Pinnacle Street, or, as I suggested the other evening, ten year debentures. These bonds are not to be sold so as in any way to prejudice the credit of your city. We would enter into an agreement satisfactory to your honorable body, assuring you of this."

Mr. O'Flynn asked on behalf of a property owner if the paving on Victoria Avenue would be tendered for.

The Mayor—I understand that Mr. Patterson offered to do it at a certain price and that the petitioners agreed for him to do it at that price.

Ald. Smith moved that the bylaw for laying Rocmac pavement on Victoria Avenue from Front Street to Charles Street, be read a first time, which was carried.

The City Engineer estimated the cost at $8,800, the city's share of which would be $660. The life of the pavement would be ten years.

On motion of Ald. Smith, seconded by Ald. Earle, the second and third readings of the bylaw were carried.

Ald. Woodley moved—"That the contractors for all pavements be required to purchase or provide purchasers for 5 per cent. bonds at par of the city, for such pavements, and that they enter into an agreement not to dispose of such bonds at a lower rate than that obtained by the city."—Carried.

Ald. Woodley further moved—"That all water consumers outside the city be put on meter rates, the charge to be one and one-half times the ordinary meter rate, without discount, and that the minimum charge be $20.

This was also carried.

NEW BYLAWS.

Ald. Wallbridge moved the adoption of a bylaw providing for borrowing $10,000 for current expenses, and another for the paying of moneys during the adjournment of the Council, which were passed.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Platt—What is the reason the contractors are not going on with the Catherine Street sewer.

The Mayor—I suppose Bridge Street sewer will not be started until Catherine Street sewer is completed. When will that be?

The Engineer—Probably about two months.

The Mayor—Then Bridge Street sewer will not be touched this year.

The Engineer replied that there was a difficulty about the Bridge Street sewer.

A PULMOTOR.

A letter was read from the manager of the Trenton Electric Light Co. saying that they possessed a Pulmotor which was primarily for the use of their employees, but that they would be pleased to place it at the disposal of the city free of cost.

The council adjourned until October 18th.

MADE DETERMINED EFFORT TO DROWN

Italian Jumped Off Pier and Refused to Grasp Life Preserver

MONTREAL, Aug. 9.—"D—— the war!" was the only coherent remark of Vangavan Scavano, an Italian, when he was pulled out of the St. Lawrence River at eight o'clock yesterday morning by Superintendent Martin, of St. Helen's Island, and Constable Garneau, of the Central station. Scavano had attempted to end his life by jumping off the end of Victoria pier into the river. Before making the leap he had removed his coat and hat, thus attracting the attention of Constable Garneau, who was further up the pier. Constable Garneau surmised that here was something wrong and shouted to draw Scavano's attention, at the same time running toward him. Without paying any notice to the policeman's shouts, the Italian ran towards the end of the pier, ten yards away, and without a moment's hesitation took a flying leap into the river.

Constable Garneau reached the end of the pier almost as soon as the man struck the water. He threw a life-preserver into the water, but the Italian made no attempt to reach it. Superintendent Martin, of St. Helen's Island, brother of Mayor Martin, was crossing in his motor launch from the island. Constable Garneau shouted to attract his attention and pointed out the man's head bobbing on the surface of the river. Superintendent Martin turned his launch and was barely in time to grab the Italian by the hair as he was going down for the third time. The Italian was being swept out towards the middle of the river by the current, and in another moment would have disappeared.

Superintendent Martin, with the assistance of his companions in the launch, drew the Italian into the pier, and he was pulled up by Constable Garneau and two men who came to his assistance. The Italian was very weak, and without waiting to call an ambulance, Garneau lifted him into a cab and took him to the Notre Dame Hospital. The half-drowned man could not speak when he was taken from the river, but while on his way to the hospital he remarked in a feeble voice, "D—— the war!"

At the Notre Dame Hospital the Italian said that his name was Vangavan Scavano. He told the physician who attended him that he was twenty-nine years of age, but would not say where he resided or whether or not his home was in Montreal. He remained at the hospital for a couple of hours, until he had recovered his strength, when he was taken to police headquarters. Lieut. Deserres, in charge at the Central station, after hearing the report of Constable Garneau, ordered the Italian to be held on a charge of attempted suicide. Scavano did not appear to have been drinking, and the police believe that he must have become demented by worrying over the war. He would not tell the police any more than he told the physicians at the hospital.

AMMUNITION CASES FILLED WITH RUBBISH

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—The Daily Mail quotes a traveler who has just returned from a trip through Russia and the Scandinavian countries as saying that the Czar's armies were terribly handicapped. Thousands of cases of ammunition when opened at the front were found to contain rubbish, he declares. This is attributed to the activity of German agents in the Russian munition factories.

ITALY'S FORMIDABLE TASK

Minister Tells of Immense Difficulties at Gorizia

ROME, Aug. 9.—Signor Orlando, minister of justice, who has lately returned from the front, warns his fellow-countrymen of the immense difficulties of the struggle around Gorizia, on the high plateau of Carso, which might almost be called impregnable.

"Looking at the line protecting the left bank of the Isonzo," he says, "one receives the impression that God, in creating it, acted like an ominpotent officer of military engineering, rendering the task of defence as easy as the task of attacking is formidable. The configuration of the mountain, the direction of their lines, the nature of the rocks of which they are formed, and the proximity of a rapid, deep river, all seem arranged to prevent a passage, while the natural difficulties are completed by the marvellous perfection of man's work of protection. Long months of preparation on the part of the Austrains have enabled them to provide all that is most modern and complete in military science. Extensive construction, the security of hiding places, natural and artificial, and the ingenuity of mechanism all combine to make patience the most necessary condition of Italian victory.

"That we have advanced so far and are still advancing is the highest praise for the Italian army, while the immense difficulties of the task are overwhelming proof of the insufficiency of the Italian frontier, which it is felt overwhelmingly justified this war."

HON. LOUIS CODERRE NOW MENTIONED FOR BENCH

OTTAWA, Aug. 9.—It is expected here that the vacancy on the court of king's bench of the province of Quebec, caused by the death of Mr. Justice Gervais will be filled by the appointment of Hon. Louis Coderre, secretary of state. Mr. Coderre has intimated to the prime minister his desire to retire from political life, and such an appointment would be agreeable to him. It is not probable that Mr. Coderre will leave office until the return of Sir Robert Borden.

Many a Business Man who is careful to protect himself in money matters, is careless about health—his most valuable asset.

For many, tea or coffee drinking silently undermines health, because each cup contains from 1½ to 3 grains of the cumulative, harmful drug, caffeine.

Five to six grains of caffeine will kill a rabbit or a cat, and repeated daily will cripple a man.

How cripple a man? The caffeine, little by little, causes hardening of the arteries and premature old age, showing more in some than in others.

Some of the symptoms of caffeine poisoning are headache, nervousness, biliousness, heart flutter, sleeplessness at night, and "fag" after reaction of the drug in the daytime.

The way to avoid all tea and coffee troubles is to leave both tea and coffee alone and use

Red Cross Gifts From Belleville

Miss A. M. Hurley, Secretary of Women's Patriotic Red Cross Society, has received the following letter in acknowledgment of five boxes forwarded to the Canadian War Contingent Association:—

London, July 13, 1915.

Dear Madam:—I am directed by the Ladies' Committee of this Association to convey to you their very grateful thanks for the splendid consignment of five boxes which you say were shipped to us on the 21st ulto.

The socks forwarded by you will be of the greatest possible use to the troops and as I have written you before, they are sent out in large numbers each month. Of course, the things that are forwarded depend almost entirely upon the requisitions received from the officers commanding the different units at the front. Woollen garments, with the exception of socks, have been almost entirely omitted for the last month or two. In place of mufflers, caps, etc., which went forward in the winter months we are sending increased quantities of such things as sweets, tobacco, soap, gum, etc. Also our Hospital work becomes daily more insistent. I think I wrote you in the spring of the letter which our Committee had received from Her Majesty the Queen, pointing out that as garments were not needed to the same extent at the front, we should concentrate our energies as much as possible on hospital work.

The Queen's Canadian is now opening two additional wings of 37 beds each and this, of course, means very great demand on our hospital supplies. However, thanks to the great generosity and splendid efforts of the Canadian people, we are well prepared for any emergency.

I was at Folkestone this last weekend; went over to the Queen's Canadian several times, partly in connection with the new stores that are being sent down from our headquarters here, and partly on other business to do with our Committee. Lady Markham gave me the list of the contents of a box forwarded to the hospital by your Society some little time ago. I am directed by the Committee to thank you most gratefully for your splendid contribution to our supplies. This is, I think, the third time we have thanked your Society for the generous support of our hospital.

I have received so many enquiries from different societies throughout Canada asking for information about the future needs of the troops. In case this information may be of use to your society I venture to enclose a copy of hints in this connection. By it you will see that certain comforts are not likely to be called for again and that others may be made in a certain way so as to prove of the greatest possible use.

As far as hospitals are concerned (I speak at least of ours) surgical gauze, absorbent cotton and surgical gauze dressings are the principal things. We are also exceedingly grateful at the Hospital to receive consignments of maple syrup and Canadian jam. Why the Canadian patients want Canadian jam when the delicious English jam is at hand I cannot say, but Canadian peach and strawberry jam is in constant demand. I am glad to say that our gifts of maple syrup and maple sugar have been able to satisfy their requirements in that line.

Such things as tobacco, soap, tooth paste, sweets, etc., are needed in large quantities in most hospitals and the purchase of these things adds very greatly to the cost of maintenance. To buy soap, for instance, for an ordinary family is not a very serious matter, but when you have to purchase it for about 200 people it becomes an item to be considered. Of course, the objection may be raised that such things as I have mentioned are cheaper in England than in Canada and it seems absurd to go to the cost of transportation, etc., when at much less cost they can be supplied here. That contention is, of course, true in a sense, but I am sure you will agree that it is better to send what is really needed than a great many things for which there is not an urgent necessity.

I spent last week-end at Folkestone and visited the Hospital several times, partly on business connected with the work of my Committee and partly to see the wounded. The latter, I am pleased to say, are all doing remarkably well. One patient had had about 60 pieces of shrapnel taken out of various parts of his body, whose cheek was blown away and whose chin was twisted round almost under his ear. He is now up and marvellous as it may sound, comparatively little disfigured, and in time will, I think, be almost normal.

On Saturday afternoon 28 of the convalescents were taken in our motor vans to Folkestone, there to enjoy an entertainment got up for the benefit of convalescents at Folkestone, and on Sunday they were taken out again in the same way to a concert given by Canadians for the benefit of the Belgian Red Cross. These outings are a godsend to the men. It may seem strange, but when they are nearly well they long for the excitement of up and doing business which attended their lives in the camps and trenches at the front. One would think that the very idea of going back would be a horror to them. Such is anything but the case

Our patients have been peculiarly free from such things as pneumonia and gastric troubles, diseases which so often follow wounds and exposure.

I trust this long letter will not prove a burden, but I thought as you had been so very good to our Hospital you might like to know something of what is doing.

May I remind you that owing to the need of every available inch of room in the Hospital for patients all supplies of whatever kind should be forwarded to the Ladies' Committee, Canadian War Contingent Association, Westminster Palace Hotel, Victoria Street, London, S.W. Here the cases can be unpacked as soon as received and the contents counted, checked, and prepared for forwarding either to the front or to the Hospital as required.

With the very grateful thanks of the Ladies' Committee,

Sincerely yours,
ELEANOR McLAREN BROWN.
Hon. Sec.,
Ladies' Committee,
C. W. C. A.

GILLETT'S LYE
EATS DIRT

THE "ROOSEVELT HOSPITAL"

By Rev. A. M. Hubly

In the City of New York, bounded by Fifty-eight and Fifty-ninth streets, and by nineth and tenth avenues, stands the beautiful group of buildings which constitute one of the best equipped, and most uniquely arranged hospitals to be found any where. It has been said by men competent of judging: "The Roosevelt Hospital, in New York City presents the most remarkable structure of its kind in existence."

The buildings are beautiful in design and architecture, and worthy of the philanthropy and ministry of sacrificing love their existence represent and the memorp they prepetuate.

As we look across the pages of the world's history, there flashes on the mind many evidences of man's desire to perpetuate the memory of human greatness.

We see the mausolemns of the mighty, the tombs of the Potentates, many of them, but reminders of the pitiable vanity of ambitious aims, and false estimates of life's value.

In our cemeteries, there are avenues of sculptured and polished marble and granite" monuments of the would-be-great; they are as silent as the graves they mark, and as cold, and as unresponsive to the cry of suffering humanity, as the victims of disease and death mouldering beneath them. But the history, the consomitants, and everyday ministry of "The Roosevelt Hospital," invest the memory of its founder with increasing value, and as the number of those whose pains are alleviated, and whose lives are lengthened within its monumentd walls, grow larger, the blessed fruit of his thoughtful benevolence is daily multiplied.

The hospital was founded under the will of the late Jas. H. Roosevelt who was born in New York, and lived there the whole of his earthly life of society—three years and was translated from the city of his birth, November thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty three.

A knowledge of the good, which this hospital is doing, may be gathered from a few paragraphs of last year's report:—

"Total number of patients treated during the year in all departments, were: Thirty four thousand, two hundred and ninety three." "Daily average of patients, in all departments, were: four hundred and thirty three." "Patients admitted to hospital, during the year were four thousand, seven hundred and ten." The gross expenses of the hospital during the year, amounted to $25,368,277."

The daily average of patients treated, free of charge in the public wards were one hundred and twenty.

The efficient staff of nurses consists of twenty two graduates and eighty-two in training, with seventy-five graduates registered for special calls to service: a very large majority of those young ladies are Canadians.

The seventy-five special nurses for service in connection with the hospital were paid last year, $6,221, 542.

The directress of nurses, is a lady of large professional experience—both by her personal appearance and conversation: On the very briefest acquaintance, one is impressed with a sense of her superior fitness for the honorable and responsible position assigned her.

The large number of young ladies under the supervision and direction of Miss ——hold her in highest esteem, and speak of hes as meriting their deepect affection, respect and obodience.

Among the many pleasing features of "The Roosevelt Hospital," is the loyalty of the nurses to its rules and regulations.

But more pleasing still, is the goodly fellowship maintained among themselves, and also the kindly respect they have for one another. Beautifully sweet is the atmosphere of the sickroom made by these ministering spirits, as they enter with smiling faces and cheery words.

We know not how much of self denial, and shutting down of personal daily worries it takes to create, even a tiny base of the precious nard that fills the hospital chambers of suffering with its perfume.. From whence come these virtues—these ministries of grace and beauty.

One can only think of them as being the effect of exhalations from a thousand contentments distilled, like the dew upon the grass, on lowly tempers and finely cultivated dispositions.

The perfume they shed is like the odor of "Him whose garments smell of Myrrh, Aloes and Cassia.

It was my misfortune to become ill with "supperative diverticulities," while in New York.

But, it was very good fortune to secure a room with surgical and medical attendance in "The Roosevelt Hospital."

After passing through a critical operation, and seven weeks of confinement, in this historic institution, I desire to bear testimony to its general worth; and also to express my grateful appreciation of the many kindnesses which I received, from all, within its walls, who had to do with my relief from pain, and my restoration to health.

The prompt and cheerful response to every call for doctor or nurse; their anticipation of my every need, seemed more than human; so that I were less than human, did I not bear in my heart eternal gratitude to those ministers of mercies, and gracious comfortors.

One has only to meet with the gentlemen of the surgical and medical staff, to become ready to place every confidence in them as men of superior skill and proficiency in their respective callings. But to be for a number of weeks under their sympathetic care, and faithful service, is to have written upon memory's page a line of grateful appreciation of kind attention which shall never be blotted out.

To be so near the unseen world as to almost hear the beat of its billows, the throb of its heart and the whisper of its many voices. Then to be called back to new correspondence with the things of time, by the kindly service of men and women, is to have forced upon us the fact that life has higher and nobler purposes than those of common ambitions.

Returning health calls one away from this place where pain and pleasure have mingled so long, both, alike, ministering to life's enrichment.

Richer in faith; stronger in love; clearer and more assured in hope, we go back to life's duties, with a higher estimate of time, and what it holds for eternity; and looking with larger and clearer vision, we shall see more that is fair, bright and beautiful! even where the shadows fall!

MILLION YEAR AT BIG EXHIBITION

Directors Very Sanguine Regarding Attendance at Thirty-Seventh Annual Fair

The Directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, expect that the attendance this year will reach the one million mark. This figure has been touched only once—in 1913—and it takes a fine brand of optimism to predict that record will be equalled in war times. Optimism has been the keynote of the Fair since its inception, and the officials do not feel that they are over sanguine on this occasion.

It will be remembered that the Germans had not been checked on their march to Paris when the Fair opened a year ago. In addition to the feeling of unrest caused by the war, the railroads had refused to grant reduced rates, and this was responsible for thousands of people staying at home when their desires were in the direction of a trip to Toronto. Then, again, the weather was extremely bad, and all these factors put together brought the attendance below 800,000 in 1914.

This year the railroads have restored the old rates and there is more settled feeling as regards the war. But, best of all, from the Fair attendance standpoint, is the prosperity of the farmer. It is to the farmer that the Canadian National Exhibition is looking for a largely increased attendance this year, and the officials are strengthened in their belief that they will turn out in larger numbers than ever before by the demand for space for agricultural exhibits, a sure barometer of conditions in the outside districts.

THE FALL OF WARSAW.

Nothing is gained by attempting to minimise the importance of the capture of Warsaw by the Germans. It was a valorous feat of arms, a triumph of German strategy, and sheer doggedness. Three previous efforts had failed. Last October, in the third month of the war, the fall of Warsaw was all but foregone, and then the Russians at one stroke drove the invaders back into their own country, moving them 134 miles in 18 days. Having done this the Russians retired to Warsaw, the Germans following, and the reason the Russians retired instead of trying either to keep the enemy out of Poland or invade his country was that the defense of Poland at all, against the Germans, was not physically feasible. The Russians have done so splendidly during this war that their evacuation of Warsaw has come as a great disappointment to their admirers all through Europe. We can only attribute it to lack of ammunition. The latest news from that quarter is to the effect that thousands of cases of ammunition opened at the front were found to be filled with rubbish. So that Russia has the German spy difficulty to deal with as well as Great Britain.

That Germany attaches great importance to the possession of Warsaw is evidenced by the fact that she has offered to make a separate peace with Russia. Now that she is in occupation of the Polish capital she doubtless thought her position was sufficiently strong to approach the Czar. But the offer was, of course, declined. Russia is in agreement with Great Britain and France not to conclude peace without the consent of the other parties to the Entente. Great Britain and France are under the same obligation. That was an adroit move made by Great Britain at the commencement of the war. We do not suppose that even if the agreement were not in existence Russia would have consented to peace at this stage. She is at one with the Allies in her resolve that now or never is the time to crush the hideous military monster which has kept all Europe in a state of tension for many years.

Germany has bought her conquest of Warsaw dearly, and her losses have been described as terrible. No doubt they have been. The experience, east and west, since the war began has been that no important gain can be made without the sacrifice of men on a scale that startles even the readers of present day reports and that in past times would have horrified people. In such work as has been going on for more than two months also, both sides must lose; and the Russian casualties must have been numbered by hundreds of thousands. The next events on the eastern frontier may hardly be guessed. As the situation is whatever supplies are to be found in a populous part of industrial Russia will be utilized by the invading enemy, while the Government at Petrograd will be deprived of the revenues and support of a considerable part of its people. The situation, however, is hardly more threatening than was that in the western field when the Government of France moved from Paris to Boulogne in September last. A few weeks then changed the situation in France and put the German invaders on the defensive. A few weeks now may change the situation in Russia, and see the invaders retreating, as they retreated before from near where their present lines are drawn.

The campaigners in the Manitoba election got the amount that was over paid on the parliament buildings up to $1,003,113. Under western booming methods, there is no telling how great the amount would have grown if the campaign had lasted another week.

A certain editor recently received from a lady some verses, daintily tied up with pink ribbon, and entitled, "I Wonder If He'll Miss Me." After reading them, he returned the effort to the sender with the following note: "Dear Madam,—If he does he ought never to be trusted with firearms again."—Montreal Star.

American newspapers, on the whole, are taking a very reasonable view of the British notes regarding contraband. They agree that there is no possibility of the difference of opinion between the two nations developing into a quarrel. If they cannot agree a court of arbitration may settle the question.

Among the Canadian troops casualties have numbered about ten thousand. The British troops have had casualties of 320,000. Though the population of Britain is only five and a half times as large as Canada's, it has suffered from the war thirty times as much in killed, wounded and missing.

A year of war has rediscovered the world. It has above all revealed the spirit of British freedom. By the old, old method many accumulations of dusty stupidity have been blown clear away and we are back again in the age of heroism and the cycle of sacrifice. The final test of manhood has been applied and this great free federation of self-governing states which we call the Empire has held firm and stood steady before the blast of cannon.—Toronto News.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

It suffices for us to know that the German Empire in every question of foreign policy allows itself to be guided solely by its own interests, and that before this supreme need all accessory scruples as to means must vanish.

We cannot urge too strongly that the present situation demands that all our efforts be concentrated on the attainment of victory.

We must not even admit the existence of considerations of the welfare, or even of the life, of third parties that could tend to weaken this mental concentration of every section of the people as one mass.—Baron von Zedlitz in Berlin Post.

There are no such things as the principles of humanity.

Poisonous gas is but one instrument of warfare among many others; the outcry against it is due to the fact that it has not yet been universally adopted.

In war there is no such thing as humanity, nor should there be, and all the lucubrations of The Hague Conference on this subject are but so much childish prattle.

Modern technical experiments yield new weapons to him who is not an idiot and knows how to take advantage of them.

Germans, not being idiots, decline to be sentimentalised.—Fremdenblatt, Hamburg.

Watched Struggle For Dardanelles

MONTREAL, Aug. 9.—When the Canadian Pacific steamship Montreal came into this port, she brought with her men who spent twelve days in May and June watching that most engrossing of all the struggles now being waged between the Allies and their enemies—the conflict for the Dardanelles. The Montreal herself was there, just outside the range of fire from the shore batteries for the most part, but she took her chances with the rest when ashore. Luckily no shell dropped nearer than one-quarter of a mile away, according to one of the men who had been there, and one hundred yards, according to a man who had been on deck at a later period.

The Montreal was stationed for a time next to the Queen Elizabeth, and the men became used to the singing of the monster shells she sent over sea and land to some point where the enemy was preparing or dealing out trouble for the allied forces.

As one man expressed it. "We could hear the shell singing as it went over the land, and it seemed to change the tone with each peak that it crossed until the missile found its mark, and then, instead of the singing sound, there was a convulsion of nature, everything seeming to go upwards, trees, earth, rocks, dust, everything."

Talking to some German prisoners taken in the land fighting, one of the Montreal men was told that they would never have believed that any troops in the world could have landed in the face of the preparations made for them. They were generous enough to say that only British troops could have done it, and this in spite of the fact that they were sore over the fact that Great Britain had gone into the war at all. They thought she had no business to go into it, and they had never expected it of her.

Nature Makes The Flavour of

The cool, tempered breezes of the hill-top gardens in Ceylon, produce a tea of delicate, yet rich and flavoury quality. A careful selection of the finest growths is blended to make "SALADA". B 78

A MASTLESS SHIP

Next the Montreal was a ship with her masts cut away, and from this ship every day an officer went up into the air in a captive balloon a mile, less or more, according to the exigencies of the situation. From there he directed the fire of the war vessels, and he was far enough away to be beyond reach of shore guns. Some of the forts destroyed by the British could not be recognized as having ever had an existence as forts. One such fort destroyed by a French vessel was only a heap of debris with two guns sticking out at the top of the heap and pointing straight heavenwards.

At Alexandria the Montreal found that the German hospital and houses which had formerly heard little of any language but German now hear scarcely anything but English. The German hospital has English wounded and English nurses, and many of the big buildings along the waterfront have been converted into tempoarary hospitals as well. Turks were plentiful before the war, but not one can now be found anywhere in Egypt except under durance. The Germans were all taken to Malta.

The war is popular with Egyptians, and on every hand they speak disparagingly of the Germans, whose designs on Egypt they have not failed to plumb. The story is told there and has been published, that the Kaiser gave a high military decoration to a Turkish general for having taken the Suez Canal.

Wounded Australians and New Zealanders at Malta and Alexandria said that the tales of the Turkish bravery were untrue, and that when they saw the allied troops approaching at the charge, they would often throw away their arms, and fall down on their knees, crying, "Allah, Allah, Allah," and begging for mercy. They said that the Turks seemed to be good fighters as long as they were hidden away, and had the enemy at their mercy, but that in hand to hand fighting they would not stand the shocck of a charge. If not stand the shock of a charge. If sign of reuctance by their German officers, the Antipodeans did not believe that the Turks would have fought for a day. On the vacated positions captured by the British, there were many whips found. In many cases they wondered why the Turks stayed so long by guns which had come under a murderous fire. Sometimes they had stayed by such guns even when the carriages were blown to pieces.

The feeling in the air among all the fighters on the Gallipoli Peninsula was that the Allies had a tough job, but that it was far from being beyond them. They were not only fighting the Turks in the trenches, but they were slowly throttling them by stopping supplies from the land, and by water, by means of the allied submarines in the Sea of Marmora.

The Poet's Corner

THE DOWNFALL OF POLAND.

(From Thomas Campbell's "The Pleasures of Hope.")

When leagued oppression pour'd to Northern wars
Her whisker'd pandoors and her fierce hussars,
Waved her dread standard to the breeze of morn,
Peal'd her loud drum and twang'd her trumpet horn;
Tumultuous horror brooded o'er her van,
Presaging wrath to Poland—and to man!

Warsaw's last champion from her height survey'd,
Wide o'er the fields, a waste of ruin laid—
Oh! Heaven! he cried, my bleeding country save—
Is there no hand on high to shield the brave?
Yet, though destruction sweep these lovely plains,
Rise, fellow men! our Country yet remains!
By that dread name, we wave the sword on high!
And swear for her to live!—with her to die.

He said, and on the rampant heights array'd
His trusty warriors, few, but undismay'd;
Firm-paced and slow, a horrid front they form,
Still as the breeze, but dreadful as the storm;
Low murmuring sounds along their banners fly,
Revenge, or death—the watchword and reply;
Then peal'd the notes, omnipotent to charm,
And the loud tocsin toll'd their last alarm!

In vain alas! in vain, ye gallant few;
From rank to rank your volleyed thunder flew;
Oh, bloodiest picture in the book of Time,
Sarmatia fell, unwept, without a crime;
Found not a generous friend, a pitying foe,
Strength in her arms, nor mercy in her woe!
Dropp'd from her nerveless grasp the shattered spear,
Closed her bright eye, and curbed her high career;
Hope, for a season, bade the world farewell,
And freedom shriek'd—as Kosciusko fell!

ANOTHER TRAGEDY OF WAR

Mother Aimlessly Wanders the Country After Three Sons Are Shot

BRECIA, August 8.—A Russian lady working for the Italian Red Cross writes: "In the Dolomite country I met a woman wandering about the road whose haggard looks and worn clothes showed signs of an aristocratic breeding. Asked if she needed help, the old woman replied: 'I don't seek charity. I seek the peace of God. My three sons were shot by the Austrians because they loved Italy, and tried to escape from the Austrain army to join the Italians.'

"The unfortunate mother was born in Vienna and was a daughter of the Roman Count Bernardi, who fought with Garibaldi. She taught her three sons to love Italy. When the war broke out all three were imprisoned and then sent to join the army on the Isonzo. They were determined to die rather than fight against Italy. Their attempt to escape being discovered, they were shot in the presence of their mother, who had followed them to the front, hoping to assist them.

"The grief-stricken woman, unable to rest, wanders through the land, the love of which cost them their lives."

WAR ORDERS YESTERDAY

This week the Dominion Shell Committee expects to visit the western plants, such as the Steel Company of Canada, Canadian General Electric, Bertram, and other concerns working on orders. Mr. Thomas was called to New York, but is expected back early this week.

Henry Ford of Detroit says he has an order for 15,000 motor ambulances for Great Britain, but no other war order.

Russia ordered 100,000 tons of steel rails from Maryland Steel Co.

A rumor of a $200,000,000 war order excited the New York stock market this morning.

War munition workers all over the States are demanding an eight-hour day.

Market experts are all advising caution now in regard to war stocks. The lower priced ones are favored.

The Crucible Steel Company, at Harrison, Pa., will erect ten buildings for the manufacture of ordnance, including the largest gun factory in the world.

The American Car Company expects an additional order for $40,000,000 worth of shells within the next few days, making $80,000,000 of this business for them to date.

Tennessee Copper Company will make chemicals to fill war orders from Russia.

Pressed Steel Car Company has finally closed a contract for 7,000 cars for European delivery.

Lake Superior Ore shipments totaled 7,204,000 tons last month, as against 5,784,514 tons, July, 1914.

The Federal Sugar Refining Company has sold another lot of 11,000 tons of granulated sugar in England and France. Since the war opened United States refiners have shipped 300,000 tons of granulated sugar to Europe, worth $30,000,000.

Seventy-five thousand tons of steel, to be rolled into bars for manufacture of shells, was purchased in the States by beligerents last week.

Thirty thousand tons of barbed wire and 10,000 tons of steel crop ends were bought by Italy.

Negotiations for 7,000,000 three to six-inch shells for the allies are in progress, involving a requirement of 150,000 tons of steel.

Steel Company of Canada is said to be working 24 hours a day on British war orders. Business now on hand assures a dividend of at least 15 per cent. on common stock, according to an official.

Russian bills amounting to $25,000,000 fell due this last week on war orders, and New York reports that they were met promptly. The Russian gold hoard of $850,000,000 in the State Bank is the biggest in the world. Paper currency is used almost entirely in Russia now.

JOFFRE AND NAPOLEON

A saying of General Joffre's which has never yet been given the publicity it deserves comes from a correspondent who vouches for its accuracy. It illustrates charmingly the modesty of the man who has saved France. The General was explaining to a favored American visitor the position of the French army intrenchments on the plain beneath the hill where they stood, and he traced the course of the German lines beyond.

"It's a big job," said the visitor. "But I guess even Napoleon, if he had had all your troops to fight with here, would have had to dig himself in just the same."

"Ah!" said Joffre, slowly, stroking his chin. "Napoleon! No, I think Napoleon would have thought of something."

When sugar first was made from beets it took about twenty tons of beets to produce a ton of sugar; now it requires but six tons, due to scientific breeding of the beets.

The Landing of Mr. Martindale

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

"Is Miss Worthington at home?"

"No, sir; Miss Worthington is in the country."

"Indeed, where did she go for her summer vacation this year?"

"I'll let you know in a moment, sir. Please come in."

The gentleman went into the drawing room and the maid disappeared upstairs. Entering a telephone booth, she shut the door carefully and called up her mistress at the Colonial hotel, Arlington Springs. When the lady came to the telephone the maid said:

"Mr. Martindale has called. He has asked me where you have gone this summer. I suppose I may give him your address."

"Wait a moment." Then, after a pause, "Yes, you may give him my address."

The maid went downstairs with a card in her hand bearing the information required and handed it to Mr. Martindale. He glanced at it, then left the house. He had been paying attention to Miss Worthington for a long while; at least, they had been very companionable. The gentleman was considered quite a catch, and the lady was anxious to land him. During the spring he had considered the expediency of giving up his bachelorhood by marrying Miss Worthington and had decided that he could not possibly bear to tie himself up. He had therefore sheered off, and Miss Worthington had gone to the country without his asking where she would go. But midsummer had come round. The city was deserted, and, though he had many friends at their country places who would have been glad to entertain him, he was not especially drawn to any of them. Thinking he would enjoy the companionship of his chum, he had called at her house for her address.

The next day, Miss Worthington received a note from her chum which read:

It's deuced slow here in town. I'm thinking of taking an outing. If you won't be bored by my company I'll join you for a few days.

On receipt of this note Miss Worthington deliberated. Had she better reply that she was not feeling very well and kept her room most of the time? The country is a good place for a girl to land a lover, but Miss Worthington had not succeeded during the previous summer, though they had been under the same roof for several weeks. If she had a foil she would feel more confident. But there was not a man at the hotel whom she could use to make Mr. Martindale jealous.

"I have it!" she exclaimed. And, going to the writing room, she wrote Mr. Martindale that the season in the country was very dull and he would not find Arlington Springs much of an improvement on the city. At the same time, if he desired to escape from the latter, she would do what she could to relieve the ennui.

Now, there was but one train a day to Arlington Springs, arriving at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Every afternoon at a quarter to 4 Miss Worthington started to walk to the village wherein was located the station, calculating to arrive at the latter as the train came in. The postoffice was directly opposite the station, and the lady carried a letter in her hand, stamped and otherwise ready for mailing. It was addressed to an old flame of hers who had at one time caused Mr. Martindale some concern. Within the envelope was a blank sheet of paper.

Miss Worthington had carried her letter to the postoffice on three different afternoons, only to take it back with her. On the fourth day, arriving simultaneously with the train, she saw Mr. Martindale alight. She attracted his attention, and he joined her.

"I had given you up," she said.

"Your letter was not encouraging, but it's dreadfully hot in the city. I could stand it no longer."

"If you like we'll walk back to the hotel together."

"Surely. I have only this suit case. I can't stay very long. I'll put it in the Colonial coach."

Having attended to this matter, he started across the street for the postoffice with Miss Worthington. She dropped her letter, and he picked it up. The address he could not help seeing. He started, and, holding the letter in his hand, he looked anxiously at Miss Worthington. She seemed somewhat embarrassed.

"I fear," he said, "that my coming is inopportune."

"Why so?"

"Possibly you are engrossed with"—

"Give me the letter."

A revolution had suddenly broken out in Mr. Martindale's breast. He had either lost or was about to lose [illegible] what we can get we don't prize; what we can't get we covet.

"Perhaps," he said, "I had better return to the city."

"As you please." There was no train till the next morning.

"May I ask if this letter contains anything—anything decisive?"

"I decline to answer the question."

He stood undecided for a few moments, then put the letter in his pocket.

Miss Worthington was greatly relieved. She had been fearful that he would mail it.

They walked to the hotel together, and when they dined a couple of hours later they were engaged.

BATTLES AND DOWNPOURS.

There Is No Connection Between Gunfire and Rainstorms.

So far as the records are available, the rain accompanying or immediately following great battles is not unlike that which might have been expected in the course of natural events, says a writer in the Popular Science Monthly. Bearing in mind the fact, already stated, that throughout large areas rain occurs on an average once in three or four days and also the subjective fact, that rain associated with July 4 celebrations or with battles would doubtless not have been remembered had it not been for such associations, the hypothesis appears to have no foundation.

In 1892 the United States government disproved the idea by experiments in which violent explosions of dynamite were produced within clouds by means of kites and balloons, with no rain following as a direct or even as an indirect result. The practice, still followed in various European countries, of attempting to prevent hail by bombarding approaching clouds or of projecting vortex rings of smoke upward also is without scientific basis. The relatively feeble convectional currents resulting from these artificial attempts to influence the weather are too meager to have any appreciable effect upon the massive convection accompanying storms and are wholly inadequate to influence precipitation.

SWISS MILITARY SYSTEM.

Tests All Youths Must Pass Before They Become Soldiers.

The Swiss system is ultra-militaristic and probably would never be acceptable to the United States. But it is interesting, nevertheless, as indicating how the problem of defense has been met and apparently solved by the earnest and patriotic people of a republic like our own.

The Swiss system is compulsory and begins with the early schooling of each boy. He does not drill or handle firearms, however, until he is twenty years old, when he reports to federal authorities for physical and literary examination. He must be able to read and write and figure, and answer questions in elemental Swiss history and geography.

The physical tests require that the applicant shall cover at least eight feet in a running jump, lift a weight of thirty-seven pounds in both hands at least four times, and run eighty yards in fourteen seconds.

Those who fail in these tests are given an extension of time for further training, not to exceed four years, and if physically disqualified at the end of that period they are obliged to pay a tax, or to take some assigned position which they can fill.—Kansas City Journal.

The Sixteenth Century Carver.

At the formal banquet of the sixteenth century the man who carved the meat was bound with the red tape of precedent. When carving for distinguished guests he had to remember that certain parts of the birds or meat must be set aside. In carving for his lord and lady he was expected to exercise great discretion in the size of the pieces he sent round, "for ladies will be soon angry and their thoughts soon changed, and some lords are soon pleased and some not, as they be of complexion." He was expected to have the rules both of the kitchen and the peerage at his knife's end. A pike, for instance, must be dished up whole for a lord and in slices for commoner folk. The rank of his diners, too, determined whether a pig was to be served up whole, sliced, plain or with gold leaf or whether new bread or bread three days old should be eaten.

It will doubtless surprise most Americans to learn that out of the small total of 4,121 graduates during the first century of the existence of the Military academy, from 1802 to 1902, 2,731 entered civil life at some period of their career.—National Magazine.

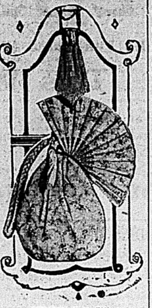
WOMAN'S WORLD.

SUMMER ACCESSORIES.

The Fan With Bag Is Another Mid-Victorian Resurrection.



TWO BAGS AND A FAN.

Mesh bag with gate top and silver chain of size just large enough to hold a bit of change. Evening bag and matching fan of flowered satin. The sticks are of white painted wood.

PAINT AND PAINT BRUSH.

Now Is the Time When Bright Sunlight Shows All the Dingy Places.

Paint and paint brush should be as close friends of the housewife as are needle and thread. Perhaps it is the unconscious psychology exercised on women by good paint advertising or perhaps it is because they are skillful at it that they enjoy odd bits of painting about the house. The can of "ready mixed" covers a multitude of sins of commission from heels, hands, knocks, scrapings and rough treatment generally.

There is the baby buggy of wicker, stained and dirty from long use. A small can of stain and a couple of coats of black on the springs and wheels will make it withstand the still harder test of spring showers. Then, baby's iron crib looks as though it has incipient measles where baby has dented off the enamel with the stock of its toy gun.' Two coats, or, better, three, of white paint and enamel will cover up the blisters and make the crib as sanitary and pleasing as when new.

On close inspection the gas store and its pipes appear rustily dingy and down-in-the-mouth, as it were. Ah, just the thing! A small can of special stove paint in black will make the stove gleam happily again and remove its unkempt air. Perhaps, too, the radiators are spotted and shineless. It is only the work of a half hour to paint them with special silver or gold radiator paint.

The kitchen is an important field for the use of paint brush and paint. Frequently unsightly plumbing can, as suggested, be made attractive by the various lacquer paints. The pantry shelves need, never be hard to clean if they are treated to one or two coats of white enamel. Table drawers also can be painted, which will prevent them from absorbing grease and getting so dirty. The legs and front of the ordinary kitchen table will look better and stay cleaner longer if given a coat of paint harmonizing with the other colors in the room. Wooden salt boxes, strips on which to hang utensils, the space between shelves in many closets, can all be made brighter and more sanitary by a liberal use of paint.

Under the head of paint must be included the great variety of stains combined with varnish or various other wood finishes. These are particularly useful in "touching up" floors, woodwork, certain pieces of furniture, and in staining soiled wicker and basket work. Perhaps it is a favorite rocker which has been kicked and knocked until the finish is spoiled. It is not very difficult to touch it up or to refinish it entirely, first sandpapering it to remove the old varnish and then handling it as if it were an entirely new piece. Taborets, small tables, stools, all these can be made to wear longer and appear like new if treated to the magic of the paint brush.

All woods with exposed pores absorb moisture and grease. Water enters the pores, causes them to swell and thus become disfigured. The more impervious the wood surface can be made the easier it is to keep it clean and the longer the wood will last. Paint, varnish and stain, whose base should always be the best linseed oil, fill the pores of the wood, coating and rendering it impervious. And paint is not hard to clean. It is the open, untreated woodwork which looks dingy, absorbs grease and is hard to care for.

Polishing Silver.

An excellent silver polishing cloth can be made in the following way: Buy an ounce of jeweler's rouge, mix with a little water, rub into a piece of chamois skin and dry.

Cleaning Raincoats.

To clean raincoats sponge them with a mixture of alcohol and ether, to which a tablespoonful of ammonia to a pint of liquid has been added.

The Snapping Turtle.

As the snapping turtle is by far the largest of the fresh water tortoises, often attaining a diameter of two feet and a weight of 100 pounds, he is no mean antagonist. A single snap of his horny jaws will sometimes remove a finger or a toe, so it is well to beware of him, says St. Nicholas.

As might be expected from his nature and armament, the snapping turtle does not live exclusively upon plant life, as do other members of his family, but displays great fondness for a meat diet. Young ducks, frogs, fish and muskrats are all dainties to be added upon occasion to his bill of fare. While he is capable of some speed in the water, his favorite method of hunting seems to be to lie quietly until his victim comes within reach and then with a lightning-like dart of his long neck seize his prospective dinner. He varies this in the case of ducks and other water fowl by rising silently beneath them—a snap of the iron jaws on leg or wing, a despairing flutter in the water, and the luckless bird is dragged beneath the surface to be speedily drowned and eaten at leisure.

Advice to Swimmers.

Every one knows enough not to go in swimming right after a meal. Most boys know enough to wait an hour after an ordinary meal and longer after a particularly hearty one. But not all of them know enough not to go into the water while they are overheated. If you have been playing baseball or tennis don't throw off your clothes and plunge into the lake, as a severe cold or chills may result. Wait a half hour to cool off, and then undress slowly and take your swim.

Word Puzzle.

I am a word of two letters. My first letter represents that which is dearer to me than house or lands. My second letter is the name of an article that cheers my life and adds to me enjoyment. My whole is the most definite and the most indefinite words in the English language, which may apply to anything in the universe and yet can designate only a single thing.

Answer—I, tea—it.

The Butterfly.

Dainty butterfly, do tell
  Where you flit and hover,
Seeking in each glade and dell
  Fragrance to discover.

For an instant now you gleam
  On a blossom yellow;
Fluttering you always seem
  Such a busy fellow.

Morning, noon and even night,
  Ever midst the flowers,
Like a human errant knight
  Haunting beauty's bowers.

Stealing sweets from every one,
  And with pollen laden
Fleeing after love is won
  To another maiden.

Fickle, gay in summer time,
  Where are you, I wonder,
When the merry sleighbells chime?
  Fast in deepest slumber.

Novelists and Love.

Charles Lever believed that novelists should retire or at all events refrain from writing love stories in due season. In his fifty-ninth year the author of "Charles O'Malley" writes to his publisher: "What you hint about a real love story is good, but don't forget that Thackeray said that 'no old man must prate about love.' As to writing about love from memory, it is like counting over the banknotes of a bank long broken. They remind you of money, it is true, but they're only waste paper, after all."—London Mail.

The Fitness of Things.

"A matter that has given me considerable concern during my more or less eventful sojourn in this vale of tears," acknowledged Jasper Knox, the sage of Piketown-on-the-Blink, "is the fact that the great majority of otherwise sensible people fall down most lamentably when they attempt to dope out the true cause for their own failure to make good. Far be it from my intention to deliver a sermon upon this most important subject, but past experience has taught me that one of the main reasons why we all are not successful lies in the fact that we are prone to sidestep opportunity in order to shake hands with temptation."—Judge.

Napkin Envelopes.

Envelopes are used instead of napkin rings in some of the pensions of Europe. White or colored or a pretty flowered crape paper of a heavy quality is doubled, then cut into pieces 11 by 16 inches, one end rounded at the corners. All around the edge receives a double row of machine stitching and the paper then is folded in three, so that the rounded end is a trifle shorter than the other part. The short end forms the flap of the envelope made by the other part. Stitch at both ends. On the flap paste a bit of white paper 1 by 3 inches, on which to write the name. The napkin when folded fits nicely into this envelope case.—New York Sun.

UNKINDNESS.

If we will remember unkindnesses it is well to begin with our own. Those we have received are not usually one sided, and the bitter words whose memory stings were seldom entirely without provocation. This at least is true: If, on examining our animosities and resentments, we find ourselves wholly blameless it will at once become easy to forgive.

Beautiful Queen of the Italians Who Is Noted For Her Charities.

QUEEN HELENA.

Now that the kingdom of Italy has gone over to the allies it may be interesting to know something of the beautiful queen who sits upon the Italian throne with her husband, King Victor Emmanuel III.

Queen Helena is extremely interested in charities, especially in those charities which have for their object the relieving of the ills of children. She is lovingly called the "Babies' Queen" by her subjects.

Queen Helena is six feet one inch in height and is a spendid horsewoman and an all round athlete. King Victor Emmanuel is five feet three inches in height, and when he and the Montenegrin princess were married she knelt upon a cushion to bring her beautiful dark head upon a level with that of her loyal lover.

The king and queen of Italy are the most mutually attached couple among the world's royalties, and at the same time the most democratic, often employing toward equals and inferiors alike a courtesy which surpasses any royal etiquette. When in Rome their private apartments are on the second floor of the Quirinal, looking toward the Barberini palace.

Although Queen Helena as a Montenegrin princess lived a comparatively humble and frugal existence at Cettinje the fall months she usually spent with wealthy relatives in St. Petersburg, while the winter found her with her sisters on the Riviera. She is a good housewife. She writes poetry and short stories and plays the violin by ear. Her demeanor in public is somewhat haughty in repose, but in speaking or in action the same graceful solicitude which has made her husband such a favorite is noticed in her.

Alone of all Italians, aristocratic Florentines still affect to dislike her, and speak of her as the "Barbarian Queen." But, then, these Florentines regard all people, with the exception of themselves and certain members of old Roman families, as barbarians.

However, this war may serve to unite more closely the entire Italian race, and even the aristocratic Florentine may be glad that upon the throne with Italy's king is a queen who, despite her Montenegrin birth, is by adoption all Italian, and who loves Italy so much that for years she has foregone the pleasure of visiting Montenegro to prove to her subjects that their queen is first, last and always loyal to her great trust.

FOR BUSINESS WEAR.

Frills Are Considered Out of Place In a Public Office.

If you are a girl who must work for her living don't give way to the temptation to buy frilly, fluffy clothes, for you will only be burdening yourself with inappropriate raiment which will never be of any use. It seems rather hard that the working girl must eschew all forms of feminine frills, for every girl loves dainty things way down in her heart. They appeal to the feminine in her; they are part of her very nature.

But in an office frilly clothes are sadly out of place; also they soon become bedraggled in appearance, and nothing is worse to look upon than soiled finery. Better a hundred times a plain but clean shirt waist, a severely cut but well pressed skirt. It is folly to wear a chiffon waist in an office, not only because such a blouse is in decidedly bad taste, but because it soon becomes soiled and unattractive and looks cheaper than the cheapest sort of a linen waist.

Several waists which can stand frequent tubbing, a plain, but well cut skirt make up the appropriate garb for the working girl. If she sticks to such an outfit during office hours she will always look neat and trim. Her love of frills and furbelows may be gratified in her evening gowns.

Useful Hint.

Pour boiling water on oranges and let them stand five minutes. This will cause the white lining to come away clean with the skin, so that a large quantity of oranges can be quickly sliced for sauce or pudding.

CHAPTER XXXIII—CONTINUED

"Oh, mammie, I am sure Providence intended you for an old maid, and you have fulfilled your destiny," retorted Dulce, who was rarely awed by her mother's solemnity. "All this fuss because I said 'Archie!' Oh, I forgot, that name is sacred: the Rev. Archibald Drummond adores his sister Grace."

"And she must be very nice," returned Mrs. Challoner with an indulgent smile at her pet Dulce. "I am sure, from what Miss Drummond told us this morning, that she must be a most superior person. Why, Phillis, she teaches all her four younger sisters, and one of them is sixteen. Miss Drummond says she is never out of the school-room, except for an hour of two in the evening, when her father and brothers come home. There are two more brothers, I think she said. Dear what a large family! and Miss Drummond hinted that they were not well off."

"I should like to know that Grace," began Phillis; and then she shook her head reflectively. "No, depend upon it, we should be disappointed in her; family paragons are generally odious to other folk. Most likely she wears spectacles, and is a thin thread-papery sort of person."

"On the contrary, she is a sweet-looking girl, with large melancholy eyes; for Miss Drummond showed us her photograph. So much for your imagination, Phil?" and Dulce looked triumphant. "And she is only twenty-two, and, though not pretty, just the sort of face one could love."

"Some people's swans turn out to be geese in the end," remarked Phillis, provokingly; but she registered at the same time a mental resolve that she would cross-examine Mr. Drummond on the earliest opportunity about this wonderful sister of his. Oh, it was no marvel if he did look down on them when they had not got brains enough to earn their living except in this way! and Phillis stuck needle into Miss Milner's body-lining ro viiereelMei tnnisno nhdg usl: iiji so viciously that it broke.

The sharp click roused Nan's vigilance, and she looked up, and was at once full of pity for Phillis's pale face.

"You are tired, Phil., and so are we all," she said, brightly; "and, as it is our first day of work, we will not overdo ourselves. Mammie, if you will make the tea, we will just tidy up,: and look out the patterns for you to match the trimmings and buttons to-morrow;" for this same business of matching was rather hailed by Mrs. Challoner as a relief and amusement.

Phillis grumbled a little over this additional labor, though, at the same time, no one worked harder than she; but she was careful to explain that it was her right, as a freeborn Britoness, to grumble, and that it was as much a relief to her peculiar constitution as a good long yawn is to some people.

"And it answers two purposes," as she observed; "for it airs the lungs, and relieves the mind, and no one takes any more notice than if I set the wind blowing. And thankful I am, and every mother's child of us, that Dorothy is approaching this room with her dust-pan and brush. Dorothy, I have a nice little sum for you to do. How many snippets of green and black silk go to a dust-pan? Count them, and subtract all the tacking-thread, and Dulce's pins."

"Phillis, you are just feverish from overfatigue and sitting so long in one place, for you are used to running about." And Nan took her by the shoulders, and marched her playfully to the small parlor, where Mrs. Challoner was waiting for them.

"Come, girls!" she said, cheerfully. "Dorothy has baked your favorite little cakes, and there are new-laid eggs for those who are hungry; and I am sure you all earned your tea, darlings. And, oh, Phillis! how tired you look!" And Mrs. Challoner looked round each face in turn, in the unwise but loving way of mothers.

This was too much for Phillis; and she interlaced her fingers and put them suddenly and sternly over her mother's eyes.

"Now, mammie, promise."

"Phillis, my dear, how can you be so absurd!" but Mrs. Challoner strove in vain to release herself. Phillis's fingers had iron tenacity in them when she chose.

'A thing like this must be nipped in the bud," pronounced Phillis, apostrophizing her laughing sisters. "You must not look at us in that fashion every evening, as though we were sheep in a pen, or rabbits for sale. You will be weighing us next; and my nerves will not stand it. No, mother; here I strike. I will not be looked at in that manner."

"But, Phillis—Oh, you nonsensical child!"

"Personal remarks are to be tabooed from this moment. You must not say, 'How tired you look! or 'How pale you are!' It is not manners at the Friary, and it is demoralizing. I am ten times more tired this minute than I was before you told me so."

"Very well, Phillis; but you must let me pour out the tea." And then Phillis subsided. But she had started the fun, and Dulce soon took it up and set the ball rolling. And Dorothy, working hard with her dust-pan and brushes, heard the merriment, and her old face lighted up

"Bless their sweet faces!—pretending to be happy, just to cheer up the mistress, and make believe it is only a game they are having!" muttered the old woman, as she paused to listen. "But, if I am not mistaken, Miss Phillis, poor dear, is just ready to drop with fatigue. Only to hear her, one would think she was as perky as possible."

When the evening meal was over, Mrs. Challoner leaned back in her chair and made a little speech to her daughters.

"Thank you, my dears. You have done me so much good. Now, if you want to please me, you will all three put on your hats and take a nice long walk together."

The girls looked at each other, and every pair of eyes said, as plainly as possible, "What a delicious idea! But only two can go, and I intend to be the filial victim." But Mrs. Challoner was too quick for them. "I said all three," she remarked, very decidedly. "If one offers to stay with me, I shall just put myself to bed and lock the door; but if you will be good, and enjoy this lovely evening, I will take my book in the garden and be quite happy until you come back to me.' And when they saw that she meant it, and would only be worried by a fuss, they went off as obediently as possible.

They walked very sedately down the Braidwood Road, and past the White House; but when they got into town, Phillis hurried them on a little: "I don't want people. It is air and exercise and freedom for which I am pining.' And she walked so fast that they had some trouble to keep up with her.

But when they had left every trace of human habitation behind them, and were strolling down the rough, uneven beach, towards a narrow strip of sand, that would soon be covered by the advancing tide, Phillis said, in an odd, breathless way. "Nan just look round and see if there be any one in sight, before, behind, or around us;" and Nan, though in some little surprise, did at once as she was bidden, in the most thorough manner. For she looked up at the sky first, as though she were afraid of balloons or possible angels; and then at the sea, which she scanned narrowly, so that not even a fish could escape her; and after that she beat the boundaries of the land.

"No, there is not a creature in sight except ourselves and Laddie," she answered.

'Very well," answered Phillis promptly. "Then, if it be all safe, and the Hadleigh wits are away wool-gathering, and you will not tell mother, I mean to have a race with Dulce, as far as we can run along the shore; and if I do not win——" And here she pursed up her lips and left her sentence unfinished, as though determined to be provoking.

"We shall see about that," returned Dulce, accepting the challenge in a moment; for she was always ready to follow a good lead.

"Oh, you are foolish children?" observed Nan, in her staid fashion. But she did not offer the slightest remonstrance, knowing of old that unless Phillis found some safety-valve she would probably wax dangerous. So she called Laddie to her, and held him whining and struggling, for he wanted to stretch his legs too; thinking a race was good for dogs as well as for girls. But Nan would not hear of it for a moment; he might trip them up and cause another sprained ankle.

"Now, Nan, you must be umpire, and say, One, two three!" And Nan again obeys, and then watches them with interst. Oh, how pretty it was, if only any one could have seen it, except the crabs and the star-fish, and they never take much notice; the foreground of the summer sea coming up with little purple rushes and a fringe of foam; the yellow sand, jagged, uneven, with salt-water pools here and there; the two girls in their light dresses skimming over the ground with swift feet, skirting the pols, jumping lightly over stones, even climbing a breakwater, then running along another level piece of sand,—Dulce a litle behind, but Phillis as erect and sure-footed as Atalanta.

Now Nan has lost them, and puts Laddie down and prepares to follow, In spite of her staidness, she would have dearly loved a run too; only she thinks of Dick, and forbears.

Dulce, who is out of breath, fears she must give up the race, and begins to pant and drop behind in earnest, and to wish salt water were fresh, and then to dread the next breakwater as a hopeless obstacle; but Phillis, who is still as fresh as possible, squares her elbows as all athletes do, and runs lightly up to it, unmindful and blissfully ignorant of human eyes behind a central hole.

Some one who is of a classical turn has been thinking of the daughter of Iasus and Clymene, and cries out, "Bravo Atlanta! but where is Milanion, that he has forgotein the golden aples?" And Phillis, stricken dumb by the question and the sudden apparition of a bearded face behind the breakwater, remains standing as though she were carved in stone.

A NEW FIELD COOKER.

Canadian Device Has Attracted Interest of Military Experts.

The type of field service cooking apparatus used by the 19th and 20th Battalions and other units of the Canadian expeditionary force, is attracting great attention among military men. The cooking stove and fire-box are supported on the axle of the truck. They are made of best quality 10-gauge steel plates, riveted together and strongly braced by heavy angle steel; the side walls double jacketed with an air space. The body contains four cooking vessels, each with a capacity of 15 Imperial gallons, two for coffee and two for stew. The fire box is of heavy cast iron, easily removable and locked into position, and suitable for burning soft coal, hard coal, coke, wood, straw, etc. The flues in the body are so designed that two of the cooking vessels can be heated independent of the other two, so that two can be boiled violently, while two are merely simmering, and the fire will travel under all the vessels. The fire doors, clean-out doors, etc., are all made of heavy steel strongly reinforced, with suitable latches and hinges, all made of forged iron, and all doors are so constructed that they can be locked shut during transportation. The four cooking vessels are each constructed of one piece of seamless, soft, sheet steel drawn into shape and reinforced at the upper edge by a heavy, reinforced rod circle. The vessels are then re-tinned inside and out, and are readily removable from the body of the apparatus. The cooking vessels can be filled with ice water, and burning ordinary soft wood, can be brought to a violent boil in 40 minutes. Two horses are hitched to the apparatus by the standard English Quick Release harness. The weight is 1,800 pounds, and the machine is properly balanced to be as easy as possible on the horses.

The Man and the Office.

His Honor George William Browe of Saskatchewan, is usually to the front when it comes to a public piece of work for which there is no sort of pay. The latest public courtesy from the Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan is the presentation by himself of a portrait of himself to the province. The portrait was done in England by Sir Hubert von Kerkomer, whose portraits are known in this country mainly through the pages of art magazines. It was done in 1914, the last painting done by von Kerkomer, who considered it the best portrait he had ever painted. It is done in the grand manner, with plenty of that impressive detail which captivates the average imagination. It may be supposed that the artist painted the office along with the man. But Hon. Mr. Brown calculates that he was not so far astray on the man either. So impressed was the artist with his picture of the man and the office, that he had a special frame designed and built under his own supervision, before the picture was sent out.

The picture now hangs in the legislative buildings of Saskatchewan, and is probably the finest portrait on view anywhere in Regina. The practice of putting up oil paintings and statues of public men is only just beginning in that country, but is making some very hopeful headway, of which this portrait of the Lieutenant-Governor is one of the best examples. His Honour deserves to be allowed to do these little things for his country; for he has the interests of his country at heart—and especially the Province of Saskatchewan, where he has been a successful lawyer, rancher, and administrator for many years. Most of our Canadian Lieutenant-Governors are pretty public-spirited citizens. Hon. Brown is one of the best of them. And his portrait will become one of the landmarks of Saskatchewan.—Canadian Courier.

Sidestepping a Query.

"When dat uppity collid man tried to staht a 'spute wid me." stated old Brother Cuddyhump, "by axin' if de world is round, like some folks say 'tis, why de doose don't de people on de yudder side drop off, I says to him: 'Putt it in writin', sah; dess putt it in writin', and I'll consider yo' distention.' And dat sho' took de gas out'n his b'loon! Uck, dat ignunt nigger kain't write, and I kain't read if he could. If he could write and I could read I wouldn't uh instigated him to putt it in writin', uhkaze I don't know de answer no mo' dan he does!"—Pittsburgh Press.

Piano and Violin.

It is undoubtedly true that between the piano and the violin the latter is the harder instrument to master. The piano is much more of a machine than the violin, and its technique as compared with that of the violin is very much easier to get hold of. The most human of all instruments, the violin is almost boundless in its demands upon the skill of the performer.—New York American.

Teeth Put to Many Uses.

All Eskimos have good teeth, but they are subjected to severe usage, being used for pinchers, vises and fluting machines. The teeth are employed in drawing bolts, untying knots, holding the mouthpiece of a drill, shaping boot soles and stretching and tanning skins. When they become uneven from hard usage they are leveled off with a file or whetstone.

Question For Discussion.

"Suppose you had framed up a lie to tell if a certain contingency arose."

"Yes."

"And fully intended to tell that lie."

"Yes."

"But the emergency does not arise and you do not tell the lie. Still, you intended to tell it. Now will that be charged up against one as a crime?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CHARACTER.

A good character is every thing. A good heart, benevolent feelings, and a balanced mind lie at the foundation of character. Other things may be deemed fortuitous; they may come and go; but character is that which lives and abides.—John Todd.

BETTER CLOTHES

The War

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Sir,—As a result of the patriotic ward meetings, fifteen Belleville men have enlisted. As Mr. Porter truly said, "Our young men cannot be cowards." Then why do they not enlist? One answer is, like the masses of our Canadian people, they do not understand the stern necessity which exists. Look around us. Do you see any adequate response of mature Canadian young men to the call for men? The people go about their amusements and occupations feeling confident that the immense powers of the Allies must necessarily be victorious. It is true that the Allies have swept the ocean clean of German ships. It is true the navy has bottled up the Germans in the Keil Canal; that they have overcome fearful obstacles in the Dardanelles, but have many more to overcome; that their small armies have in the West defeated the German plans and have exhibited astonishing bravery and prowess in holding in a deadlock the immense hordes of Germany. But the time has arrived when we must recognize that the future destiny of the world hangs trembling in the balance. We must not hysterically, but calmly, and honestly, look at the present aspect of the war and endeavor to see what is before us. The affidavit recently made by an army expert states that the German and Austrian armies number together sixteen millions without counting the millions of Turks. We have no reason to doubt the truth of that sworn statement. How has this result been obtained? The answer is by conscription. Every country in the world but Great Britain and the United States has conscription. Without it Great Britain cannot (it is feared) raise the necessary troops. They have at immense cost taken the registry in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales in order to discover how many men are eligible for the army. A black lined leader of yesterday's issue of the Star states that Lord Kitchener and Mr. Asquith have been for several days in consultation, evidently upon conscription. That the young Canadian men will not respond to the call in sufficient numbers appears certain. We may as well prepare for conscription, as it will certainly come. Kipling points out in glowing language how unfair the voluntary system is. The very best men of the nation volunteer. The shirkers, the cowards, the men who hang back to fill the places made vacant by our noble patriotic young men, will not enlist. The result of our efforts in Belleville prove this to be true. I know every loyal heart shrinks at the idea of conscription. Bitter as is the dose, it must be swallowed. Now it may be asked by those who are eligible and should enlist but do not, why is conscription necessary? The answer may be found by taking a glance at the present aspect of the war. Let us face the facts. Russia cannot take the offensive for months, as she has lost within sixty days one and a half millions. If she can save her army she will do well. Probably the Teutons will now crush Servia, Austria's particular enemy. Little Montenegro will be similarly treated. Russia cannot render assistance. Germany and Austria will say to Roumania and Bulgaria, "You are helpless. You cannot withstand our forces. Join us and we will give you the additional territories you so ardently desire. Refrain, and we will crush you." Roumania and Bulgaria hate each other as the result of the Balkan War. By playing the one against the other the Teutons will probably acquire both, and will then acquire nearly all of Europe and the Roumanian and Bulgarian armies. What can prevent this? Certainly neither Russia nor the Allies. The only help I can see is Japan. Japan is our ally, and if she enters the field success will be ours. If Japan does not interfere, then the Allies in line upon the West will have to stand the sweep of the millions who have been fighting Russia. Italy has her hands full. At fifteen millions per day, how long can the conflict be maintained? The starvation bogey has failed. Before Germany can be starved her two millions of prisoners who are working her arsenals and her fields must be starved. Germany has ceased to trade with other nations. Her losses in colonies, commerce and men, are beyond calculation. It is said that her financiers have informed the Kaiser that unless the war ends soon their country will be bankrupt. Germans understand that they must fight to a finish, and will throw everything they possess into the melting pot to help carry on the war. We, too, must face the music. There is no retreat in this war, nor peace, until the Allies win. Win we must at any cost, and win we shall; but to do so we must have millions of men and explosives. Young men of Belleville, enlist now. Do not let us have to face the shame of conscription.

Lord Kitchener says "In every man's life there is one supreme hour towards which all earlier experience moves, and from which all future results may be reckoned. For every individual Briton, as well as for our national existence, that solemn hour is now striking. Let us take heed to the great opportunity it offers, and which most assuredly we must grasp NOW, AND AT ONCE, OR NEVER."

Sir John Simon, the Home Secretary, says "I say plainly, that if we do notdo more in the future than we have done in the past, we are going to be beaten.

Yours truly,
JOHN J. B. FLINT.

TRIP TO NAPANEE

Despite the unfavorable weather the steamer Brockville had a very successful excursion Saturday afternoon to Napanee. Great interest was taken by the passengers wondering who was holding the ticket that would draw the grand prize given by the steamer. Mr. Walter Lingham kindly held his hat while Miss Strethel Walton drew therefrom the lucky ticket, being number 4773, the stub of which was held by Mrs. G. R. Cunnell of Trenton, after which Mr. Lingham presented her with a Brownie kodak, all ready for operation. Captain Christie was the first victim pursued by the camera, but being of a bashful nature retreated to cover. The passengers all enjoyed this beautiful sail up the Napanee River, and their one hour stay in Napanee, as well as getting home early.

Presentation to Mr. Roy White

The many friends of Mr. Roy White, the popular accountant in the Standard Bank in this city, will learn of his removal with mixed feeling of pleasure and regret. Pleasure that he has been promoted to the managership of the Standard Bank at Brechin, and regret that so efficient an accountant and so genial a young man is taken from our city. As soon as it was learned that he had received instructions to leave at once for his new post, a number of the customers of the bank appointed a committee and presented him with a gold headed cane, upon which was the following engraving: "Roy White, Belleville, Ontario, Aug. 9th, 1915, from his friends, the customers of the Standard Bank." The gentlemen who presented the cane were, W. S. Cook, F. E. O'Flynn, Capt. Hunter, H. F. Ketcheson, W. B. Deacon, H. W. Ackerman, F. S. Deacon, R. J. Graham, M. Sprague, J. E. Walmsley, Edgar Vermilyea and John McFee. Owing to the short notice given Mr. White the comittee had little time to arrange the matter. Messrs. W. S. Cook, F. E. O'Flynn and H. W. Ackerman made the presentation. Mr. White occupied different positions of trust in the Standard Bank at Picton, Toronto, Brantford, Midland and Belleville, having been in the Standard Bank, Belleville, for four years.

Mr. White carries with him the best wishes not only of his many intimate friends but of the citizens of Belleville.

The staff of the Belleville branch with whom Mr. White is deservedly popular, presented him with a signet ring with his monogram engraved. The following is the address which was presented to him on behalf of the customers:

R. R. White, Esq.,
Belleville, Ontario.

Dear Mr. White:—Having learned this afternoon that you had been promoted to the manager of the Standard Bank at Brechin, the customers of the bank felt they would like to express in writing their appreciation of your services while in our midst. Your close attention to business and your unfailing courtesy has always been appreciated. Your splendid management of the bank during the absence of Mr. John Elliott won our admiration, and we feel that you merit the honor which has come to you. We hope that the future will give you many blessings. That the present promotion is merely a step to greater advancement and that amongst the pleasantest memories of a busy life you will place those of your four years in Belleville, and that when many events fade from memory the many pleasant associations with your Belleville friends will still be with you. We present you with this gold headed ebony cane suitably engraved, as a token of our good feeling for you, as a mark of our best wishes and trust that whenever you see it your thoughts will turn with gladness to the Belleville friends, in the City by the Bay. Signed on behalf of the customers,

W. S. COOK,
H. W. ACKERMAN,
F. E. O'FLYNN.

Dated August 9, 1915.

FLEE BELGIUM BY FAKE

In Make-Believe Contest 112 Belgians Escape Into Holland

AMSTERDAM, July 25.—(By Mail).—How 112 Belgians escaped into Holland through a cleverly faked bicycle race, is told in dispatches from the frontier.

A number of Liege sportsmen called on the German commandant of that district a fortnight ago and asked permission to organize a bicycle race for the benefit of local war victims. The race was to be from Liege to Moulaad, on the Dutch frontier.

The Commandant fell in with the plan, only stipulating that each contestant must wear an arm badge with the German colors and affix a small German flag to his bicycle. After some demur the promoters of the race consented to the conditions. The Commandant supplied the badges and flags himself and agreed to send a military band to the starting place.

The race took place some days later with 112 contestants. The entire countryside turned out to watch the event, and the German sentries all along the road saluted the racers as they pedaled by. But the cyclists did not stop when they reached Mouland; they continued straight on across the Dutch border and failed to return.

It Had a Farreaching Effect.

Two hundred and fifty years ago a peddler selling books gave a pamphlet to one who was supposed to be an ordinary young man, but he was Richard Baxter, and under the influence of that pamphlet he wrote "The Saints' Everlasting Rest." This fell into the hands of Philip Doddridge, and he wrote "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul." This book fell into the hands of Wilberforce, and he wrote "A Practical View of Christianity." This book came to Leigh Richmond, and under the power of it he was led to write "The Dairyman's Daughter.". This in turn fell into the hands of Thomas Chalmers, the mightiest Scotch preacher of his day, and after he became a minister it was the means of his conversion and of his mighty spiritual transformation. A peddler on the one side and Thomas Chalmers on the other—what a marvelous story!—Christian Herald.

Shad and Cod.

Shad are distributed along the entire east coast of the United States and northward and eastward to the gulf of St. Lawrence. Shad abound in nearly every river of the Atlantic coast. Its migrations from the sea are in quite a regular succession of time from relation to latitude. It first appears in the St. Johns river, Florida, about Nov. 15; in Georgia and South Carolina rivers in January, in the Potomac in February. In the Delaware the maximum run is about May 1, in Maine rivers about a month later, etc.

Cod are widely distributed in the north Atlantic ocean. To the north they range far beyond the arctic circle and to the south as far as Cape Hatteras, although they are not common south of New Jersey. The cod in the Pacific ocean is found from Bering sea south to Oregon. The largest cod are found along the Massachusetts coast and from that north.—Philadelphia Press.

Distinction.

"What distinction do you make between 'entertainment' and 'art?'"

"'Entertainment,'" replied the theater manager, "is what people want. 'Art' is what people want to make other people think they want."—Washington Star.

Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

CURTAIN LAUNDERING.

How to Correctly Wash Lace Curtains and Dry Them.

There is a right as well as a wrong way to do curtains.

First, take the measure of all the curtains before putting in the tub. Keep this slip of measurements to adjust the stretchers correctly.

Second, fold the curtains lengthways and crossways until they are about a foot either way and keep them this way until they are ready to put on frames. This will keep them from stretching.

Third, soak in slightly warm water for a half hour, then squeeze gently (never wring) and put in warmer water and rub them good with any white soap. Let soak while the curtain frames are being cleaned by using a small whisk broom and soapsuds, then rinse and dry. Now, squeeze the curtains carefully (never rub on a board), remove from this water and place in a boiler of warm suds and ammonia and let come to a boil and boil about ten minutes.

Fourth, suds, rinse and blue. Now for the starching, which is a very important part. For six pairs use three tablespoonfuls of good starch to three and one-half quarts of water. Dip a small piece of net in the starch to try it and then dry it quickly and make sure the stiffness the curtain will be when dry.

Fifth, now they are ready for the frames. Take the first one and put over the pin in one corner of the top of the curtain; then go to the bottom of the curtain on the same side and catch up the other corner, then the opposite corners. Now begin in the middle of the curtain and pin two or three, then in the middle between this and the ends either way. Same way with the other sides, also the ends or top and bottom.

Do not draw them along the edges, but with both hands bring them up to the pins in a straight line.

Keep the threads of the curtains always straight and ease in any slight fullness, should there be any, rather than let it come out at ends.

When dry remove carefully and do this one important part: Lay the curtains lengthwise on a bed not in use and fold in the middle lengthways, then once again lengthways, never crossways. When the curtains are on the poles they will hang in lengthwise folds.

The surprise and satisfaction that come from curtains done the right way doubly repay one for all the work.

Scalloped Onions.

Boil six or eight onions until tender, changing the water once. Separate them with a fork and arrange in layers in a buttered earthen dish, alternating the layers with buttered breadcrumbs. Season with salt and pepper, pour over the whole enough rich milk to nearly cover, spread with melted butter and brown in a moderate oven.

"Let Her Go, Gallagher!"

Judge Beaver of Morgan county, Ky., had a trotting mare of which he was very proud. The animal was always driven at the race meets by a man named Gallagher, who was at that time city marshal of Harrodsburg. On one occasion the judge entered his mare at a trotting meeting in Tipton county. Some sports there, knowing of the judge's pride in the animal, thought they would lower his colors for once, so they entered against her a noted fast trotter. At the end of the first mile the two trotters passed under the wire neck and neck at a 2:40 pace, and the judge grew wildly excited. "Let her go, Gallagher! Let her go!" he shouted. And Gallagher, hearing, loosened the lines. The mare pluckily responded and finished more than a dozen lengths ahead amid the wild cheering of the crowd.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

How Plants Breathe.

Plants have two experiences common to all living things, although they have none of the senses possessed by animals. They breathe the air and perspire. The leaves and stems of plants correspond to the respiratory organs of animals, and it is by this means the plants take in the air. Plants are chiefly water absorbed from the earth. Of the 25 per cent solid matter the principal constituent is carbon, nearly all of which is absorbed from the atmosphere by the action of minute bodies contained in the green leaves. Plants also absorb oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen from the atmosphere through their leaves and also through their roots. All contribute to building up the organic structure of the plant. Used up moisture is given off by plants through their leaves, just as animals perspire through the pores of their skins. Calculations made as to the amount of water thus perspired by plants show that the sunflower, only three and one-half feet high, gives off as much moisture as a man.

How the Flow of a River Is Measured.

If you see a man leaning over the railing of a bridge intently watching the river with a telephone receiver at his ear do not think that the man is trying to talk to the fishes or to a diver below the surface. He is probably one of the government's engineers measuring the amount of water passing under the bridge. This is done by lowering an instrument known as a current meter into the water at several points under the bridge to determine the speed of the water and by measuring the depths of the water at the same points. From such information the flow of the river at that particular time and height can be computed, and when such measurements have been made at a number of different heights the flow of the stream at any height can be determined. Then if a record of the height of the river is obtained each day from a river gauge the flow for each day can be computed.

Parliamentary Frontiers.

On either side of the commons chamber of Great Britain's parliament house there is a distinct line along the floor, and any member who when speaking steps outside the line on his side is liable to be called to order. These lines are supposed to be scientific frontiers and the neutral zone between is beyond the length of a sword thrust, and, although members no longer wear swords, except those who are selected to move and second addresses to the throne on certain occasions, the old precaution still lingers on.—Westminster Gazette.

Still In Doubt.

"Why don't you marry, old chap?"

"Do you think a man could procure all the necessaries of life on $1,500 a year?"

"Of course, but not the luxuries."

"Well, I haven't decided yet whether a wife is a necessity or a luxury."—Boston Transcript.

Pigeon English.

The expression "pigeon English" arose from the Chinese attempt to pronounce the word "business," which through various forms became "pidgin" and then "pigeon." "Pigeon English" is a strange jargon of many languages, but "business" is carried on by it.

MANY NOVEL IDEAS.

Methods Used to Raise Money In Canada for Red Cross.

The Government gets money for the war by the simple process of levying taxes or floating loans. Whether we wish to buy bullets or not, we are forced to pay our tithe every time we buy a postage stamp. But the Red Cross organization, which exists for the preservation of life and the relief of misery, has to rely on human sympathy and instantaneous generosity. You can kill men on credit, but you cannot heal them except on the basis of cash down.

As a result, the Red Cross worker in appealing for our voluntary contributions has to become a consummate master of psychology.

A glance at the sources of the money which flows into the coffers of the Red Cross Fund and of the supplies which are despatched every week from the central shipping office in Toronto shows that the Red Cross, for the appeasing of misery, levies a tithe on our merriment and makes a joy and pleasure of charity and humanitarianism, which is eminently as it should be, for we are told that Heaven likes a cheerful giver.

Charles Spurgeon once spoke of smoking a cigar "for the glory of the Lord." Similarly throughout Canada people are playing auction bridge, applauding amateur theatricals, having their palms read in striped tents on picnic grounds, listening to songs and recitations at concerts, and drinking tea and eating sandwiches at church "socials," all for the greater glory and prosperity of the Red Cross.

Our Canadian Thespians have been particularly active in this humanitarian work. An amateur company in North Sydney has given the box office receipts of two pieces, called, respectively, "A Misfit Hero" and "My Husband's Wife." In Cobalt there was given a drama called "Stop, Thief." In Toronto the students of the Conservatory of Expression gave an entertainment consisting of selections from Shakespeare. In another Canadian town the cinematograph was made to wear a Red Cross brassard, and a photo-play was the medium for awakening the citizens' generosity.

In this good work the Church has been the whole-hearted ally of the stage. By bazaars, concerts, socials, picnics, carnivals, raffles, lectures, and public readings, in short by every art that it possesses of pleasing the public taste and unloosing the public purse, it is contributing its quota to Red Cross revenue.

In Sherbrooke, Que., the boys of Bishop's College gave an assault-at-arms for the benefit of our Canadian wounded. The young ladies in an Ottawa convent school sold tickets for an exhibition of their art work, thus devoting to the Red Cross their skill in tinting flowers, as the boys their ability to swing on parallel bars. These are only a few of the ways in which the Red Cross worker, rendered inventive by devotion to a worthy cause, has developed an amazing fertility of resource in the gentle craft of collecting money.

With every Red Cross divisional point as a recruiting station the women of Canada have mobilized for this work and have become ingenious in collecting the sinews for their war against pain. Their chief weapon in this struggle for munitions of mercy is a simple knowledge of human nature and of the fact that man gives most generously when he is amused, and that one garden party is worth ten sermons.—Toronto Star Weekly.

Pretty Thin.

"Thin!" replied the man who was talking about a mutual acquaintance. "Well, he's so thin that when he eats macaroni he can only swallow it one piece at a time!"—Pittsburgh Press.

Declined With Thanks.

Beggar—Won't you give me a nickel for my starving wife, sir? Pedestrian—Nothing doing. I'm married already. —Philadelphia Ledger.

London Times Traces Peace Talk to Berlin

Inspired Article of Dutch Press Suggests Methods of Facilitating Reproachment

LONDON, August 10.—Apropos of the reported German peace proposal to Russia, the Times publishes the following Amsterdam despatch, dated August 7:

"About two months ago the Cologne correspondent of the Tijd made a rather remarkable prophesy. He said he heard from a responsible person that the central powers, after freeing their own territory from the enemy and prosecuting the war on hostile soil, would be in a position to make known their views as to peace. The circumstances would be such as to explode the idea that they were content to an unfavorable conclusion of the war, but, on the other hand, the responsibility for the continuance of the war would rest with the Entente Powers.

"It would appear that the moment for a fresh campaign on these lines is considered to have arrived. In its morning edition yesterday the Nieuwe Rutterdamsche Courant gave prominence to an article which attracted wide attention in Holland. It stated that it had received this article from a diplomatic source through the channel of one of its foreign correspondents. It does not require much acuteness to see that the article is of German origin.

"The article says: 'It is impossible to reach a conclusion on the battlefield; therefore, wiser councils may prevail among the belligerent peoples, if not among their governments.

"'As to the British, it is not impossible that they, whose army and fleet are unbeaten, will ultimately listen to the voice of reason. There is no single reason why their opponents should offer conditions that would exclude a reapproachment and prolong the war unduly.

"'The chance of obtaining peace while exhausting the enemy is small, for all the belligerents' general staff everywhere desire to impose upon the enemy a peace which would make it impossible for him to resume hostilities for generations. There is little chance of realizing this wish.

"'There is far more probability of realizing the desire of the Socialists in all countries to negotiate for peace on the basis that the victor will not annex peoples of any race or language different from their own, though such a basis would, of course, need to take account of the results achieved on the battlefields.

"These two claims may appear irreconcilable, but it should be remembered that, apart from the conquest in Europe there are many other means of restoring a balance, and providing compensation.'"

No Prospect of German Advance To Petrograd

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Discussing the possibility of an attempt by the Germans to reach Petrograd in view of their activities in the Kovno and Dvinsk regions, the correspondent of the Evening News at the Russian capital says the success gained by the Russian fleet at Riga has reassured the capital, and no advance against Petrograd is likely unless the Germans obtain command of the Baltic, giving the invaders a line of communication by water as well as by land.

Korno is about four hundred miles southwest of Petrograd.

BABY- KILLERS RAID ENGLISH COAST AGAIN

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The fifteenth Zeppelin raid on England since the beginning of the war was made last night, the result being the killing of fourteen people, the wounding of fourteen more, and the starting of several fires by incendiary bombs dropped from the airships. All the fires, according to an official statement issued here to-day, were promptly extinguished.

British aviators pursued the retreating Zeppelins early this morning as they flew over the North Sea, and in the spectacular aerial fight which followed one Zeppelin was destroyed at Ostend. A British aviator, Flight Lieutenant Lord, was killed through making a bad landing at the aviation camp on his return to England.

FIFTY SUBMARINES LOST BY GERMANY

The Statement Is Said in New York to Come From High Official in the British Admiralty and to be Reliable

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—(Special)—According to the current issue of The Army and Naval Journal about fifty German submarines have been destroyed since the beginning of the war. Owing to the policy of secrecy maintained by the British Government little mention has been made of any submarine activities, and it was not generally known that more than a dozen of the "unterseebootes" had been captured. The Army and Naval Journal says:

"We have it on authority which would carry conviction were we at liberty to mention it that nearly fifty German submarines have been sunk, captured or destroyed by the allies up the the 20th of July."

Col. Williams C. Church, editor of The Journal, today told a Times reporter that he had written the paragraph quoted and that he had trustworthy information upon which he based his statement. It came from an official high in the British Admiralty. Col. Church felt constrained to keep his name secret, and believed that it would be unwise if more detailed information were made public.

Few Married Men In Canadian Army

Pay Sheets Show That 80 Per Cent. of theForces are Bachelors

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—(Special)—That a large proportion of British soldiers were married men has been one of the strongest arguments in Great Britain for conscription. It was pointed out today on investigation of separation allowance figures in the Militia Department pay sheets, however, that such is not the care in Canada. The percentage of married men in the Canadian forces today is 20 per cent., or one-fifth of the whole total.

Canada is paying out to her soldiers in the Dominion, in England and at the front, $125,000 per day, or about $45,000,000 per year, and this sum, of course, is rapidly increasing. Twenty-five thousand cheques fot separation allowance are being issued this month, a total of $15,000,000 per year being paid to the wives and families of married soldiers, and about $12,000,000 of assigned money is being paid over. This has necessitated a very large increase in the staff of the Militia Department, and day and night work on their part.

Soldiers in many cases neglect to ask for separation allowance, or assign their pay, and this leads to delays which have made the Paymaster-General's branch the most abused division in the whole civil service. In several cases, too, soldiers have assigned their pay to sisters or others than their wives and complaints have immediately followed.

PREMIER BORDEN SAILS FOR HOME IN TEN DAYS

LONDON, Aug. 10.—(Special)—While reticence is observed with regard to the date of Premier Borden's return, it has been learned on good authority that his visit will come to an end within ten days. The demands, both public and private, upon Sir Robert's time, have in no way diminished. Deputations and personal callers continue to occupy his time; in fact, certain provincial representatives have so far failed to get an appointment.

Commenting on the presentation of the freedom of the city of Bristol to Premier Borden, the Bristol Times and Mirror expresses the city's pride in the centuries old historical association with the North American Continent, and the close connection in modern times with the Dominion. The freedom of the city granted to Premier Borden was not only a personal greeting, but a civic recognition of the noble part taken in the war by the Dominion Government and people.

THE MUSKOKA TRAGEDY CHAUFFEUR NOT BLAMED

UTTERSON, Aug. 10.—That John Clarke, driver of the car which plunged on Long Lake Thursday, bearing to death H. R. Alley and four other Torontonians, was not to blame, and that the bridge was kept in a reasonably safe condition by the Township of Stevenson, was the substance of a verdict returned by a coroner's jury to-day. A rider was added urging that all drivers of hired motor cars be required to take out chauffeur's licenses and suggesting that a speed limit of six miles per hour in crossing bridges be enforced.

Russia New Port In Arctic Ocean

Will be Open the Year Round—May be Ready This Year

By October 1 next Russia hopes to have a double-track railway in operation leading direct from Petrograd through Petrozavodsk to Kola and the Arctic Ocean. This new line will parallel the present single track road, which conects Archangel with Vologda, but will lie more than two hundred miles to the westward. What is more important is the fact that on the completion of the new road Russia will have an all-year-round open connection with western seas, and this open communication will be maintained through Ekaterina, at the head of the Gulf of Kola.

The distance between Kola and Ehaterina is about thirty-five miles. In the winter time the ice prevents vessels approaching Kola closer than ten and a half miles. In the harbor of Eskaterina ice is seldom seen except for a short period around the last of Februray or early in March and when only during winters of unusual severity.

Ekaterina enjoys the advantage of being near to the Gulf Stream. It is expected that with the inauguration of the new service communication can be had between Ekaterina and Petrograd in twenty-four hours' time.

The Kolomma Works at Golutrin, province of Moscow, are building Mallet compound freight locomotives for the Arctic service. These engines have a weight of 64.2 tons, and will burn either coal or oil.

Son of Pretender Declared Bankrupt

Don Jaime's Dashing Spanish Son Has only 28 Cents

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—The embarrassing discovery that his cash capital was 28 cents and his liabilities $36,545.32 caused dashing Prince Ludovic d'Aragon Pignatelli, son of Don Jaime, pretender to the throne of Spain, to file a petition of voluntary bankruptcy to-day in the Brooklyn Federal Court.

From the time he arrived here, August 5, 1911, as the guest of Robert Goelet, at Newport, Prince Pignatelli has been stepping dramatically into the public prints about every once in a while, now by becoming engaged to one or another of America's heiresses, now by running over someone in automobiles, and finally by eloping with Miss Ruth Morgan Waters, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Jason Waters, of Redbank, N.J.

It was the automobile that figured largely in placing him in his present embarassing position. Mrs. Alice S. O'Connell got a judgment of $15,959.86 against him July 1 in the Nassau County Court for the death of her husband, Edward, the victim of the accident.

TIGHTER RESTRICTIONS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—Just as a precautionary measure the movements of visitors about parliament hill are being slightly restricted. Cameras must not be used. Visitors to the house of commons must be accompanied by someone who can vouch for their identity. The outer iron gates adjacent to parliament hill grounds are also closed at night.

Man Swept Over Falls

In Clutch of Cataract, He Tried to Right Himself and to Grasp Avery's Rock

NIAGARA FALLS, Aug. 10.—Unable to give any help, more than 100 men and women watched from Goat island and the mainland at 8 o'clock to-night, the frantic struggles of a man against the current of the upper cataract that swept him over the American fall a moment later.

No one here knows who the man was. Along the banks of Goat island and the mainland, the reservation police found no one who had seen the man enter the cataract. All who saw the man told the police that during the sweep and tumble toward the brink, his black hat remained on his head.

The man was first noticed by a party of young men who were leaning over the Goat island bridge watching the waters tumble toward the falls One of them pointed to a man in the water just below the bridge. They gave an alarm. They saw him trying desperately to right himself, watched him swept toward Avery's rock and were held tense as they saw his futile efforts to grasp an overhanging bush on the rock. It was dusk; none of the watchers was able to tell whether the man was young or old. They know he wore dark clothes.

800 Shells a Day

About 850 Workmen are Employed in Kingston Locomotive Works

KINGSTON, Aug. 10.—In the course of two or three weeks time the Canadian Locomotive Company will be manufacturing sixty-pound shells. At present numerous eighteen pounders are being turned out. As soon as work is started on the sixty-pounders, a 35-pound shell will also be made. The 35-pounders are 4.5 inches in diameter, and are known as high explosive shells used in battering down walls.

A press representative had an interview with William Casey, in charge of the shell manufacture, on Monday morning, and he stated that the shrapnel industry has reached such proportions at the local works that instead of it now being confined to the second floor of the machine shop, it is carried into several shops. As a consequence no more passes are allowed to visitors who may wish to see the inner workings of this plant unless they receive a permit from Ottawa.

The new building which has been recently erected, will in time be used for a blacksmith shop, but inside of a week, when the building is ready for industrial operations, it will also be used almost solely for shrapnel.

About eight hundred finished shells are turned out each day at the local plant, and in time it expects to be a close competitor to those few firms in Canada that turn out at the most fifteen hundred finished shells a day.

Enough work is on hand to keep the Locomotive Works busy until the latter end of February. Three hundred and fifty men are now employed on shrapnel work, while almost five hundred are busy with locomotive construction. Many more mechanics are still wanted by the management, who intend before long having a payroll of eleven hundred.

Two Deserters in The Lindsay Jail

PORT HOPE, Aug. 10.—Two deserters are now in the Lindsay jail awaiting their removal to Kingston. One of the men is Pte. Carter, who got considerable notoriety previously through his armorous inclinations for a young girl who was a ward of the Children Aid Society. This is the second time for Carter to desert.

He was captured by Corp. Pember at the home of Mrs. Greene, where he had previously boarded and was in act of getting away with his clothes when scooped up by Quarter-master Sergt. Geo. Foster and Corp. Pember He will be sent overseas according to reports on his return to Kingston.

The other deserter is Pte. Petch who was located at Gooderham by the county constable of that place. Petch was working in a saw mill when taken by the officer who brought him to Kinmount, where he was met by Quarter-master Geo. Foster, who took him in charge and landed him in Castle Balfour. Pte. Petch belonged to the 38th Battalion, Kingston.

ALLIES AGAIN ADVANCE AT THE DARDANELLES

50,000 Fresh Troops Landed—Gain of 200 Yards—Forcing the Dardanelles Will be of Greatest Help to Russia

(Canadian Press Special)

CONSTANTINOPLE, via Berlin, Aug. 11.—Enver Pasha, the Turkish Minister of War, declared today that according to his information the Entente Allies in their latest operations at the Dardanelles had landed three divisions of troops, comprising about fifty thousand men.

The losses among them, however, he asserted had been very heavy already.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The renewed attempt by the allies against the Turkish positions in the Dardanelles, which apparently is in full swing, seems to be a concerted one. Attacks are being made at the tip of the peninsula, along the Krithia road, where a gain of 200 yards on a front of 300 yards has ben made, and at Sari Bahr, where an important crest has been occupied, according to General Sir Ian Hamilton, Commander-in-chief of the British forces.

"Elsewhere," General Hamilton's report continues, "a fresh landing had been successfully effected and considerable progress made."

This landing evidently was a surprise to the Turks, as 630 of their prisoners, a number of guns and a quantity of material are declared to have been taken.

A Feint Attack.

According to a Turkish official report, forces were put ashore in the environs of Karachali, a town on the road which skirts the north shore of the Gulf of Saros, opposite the neck of the Gallipoli Peninsula, and near Avi Burnu. This latter place, though not shown on available maps, is believed to be at the foot of Sari Bahr, just north of where the Australians are holding a strong position.

At Avi Burnu the Turks admit that the landing was successfully carried out, but they claim to have dispersed the troops which came ashore near Karachali. It is believed in military circles that the landing at Karachali was only a feint to disguise the real intention of the allies, although it is said that the putting ashore of a strong force at this point might result in their working around and cutting the Turkish main line of communications with the Gallipoli Peninsula above the Bulair line across the neck of the peninsula.

Cynosure of Europe.

The forcing of the Dardanelles is realized by the military critics here to be of the greatest importance, for they assert that it is the only way that the allies can render immediate aid to Russia and repay her for the great sacrifices she has made for the common cause. In addition, it is believed by the military observers that a success here would bring the Balkan States definitely over to the side of the Quadruple Entente powers in the war. Italy is understood to be prepared to lend a hand in the Dardanelles operations.

Pope Supports Peace-at-Any Price Policy

Consciously Or Unconsciously He Is Aiding the Cause of Germany

ROME, Aug. 11.—Newspaper Roma says: "Pope Benedict has determined to make another appeal for peace and use every means within his power to bring it about."

The Roma asserts it has been informed that the Pope will forbid all his clergy in the beligerent countries, under pain of excommunication, from offering prayers for victory, from asking blessings for the combatants, or even administering sacraments to those responsible for a continuation of war. He is even considering the convocation of a universal council of the church at Rome, and has made a personal appeal to the King of Spain, the Scandinavia, President, United States, Switzerland, and South America Republic, to join with him in an effort to obtain at least a truce.

German Embassy Charge Mystery To Washington

Mixup Over Affidavit by Radio-Operator That British Ship Used U. S. Disguise

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—State Department officials are puzzled over the statement made by the German Information Service in New York on Friday that the German Embassy had filed with the department a photographic copy of an affidavit purporting to have been made by Paul Richard Fenner, an American radio-operator, to the effect that while he was serving on the British ship Masconomo, the vessel was disguised by hanging large signs over her sides bearing the name of "Texas" and her British identity otherwise concealed by flying the American flag. The deception was practised, the affidavit has it, while the Masconomo was passing through the zone of German submarine activity off the British coast. Officials of the State Department who looked into the matter today said that hey could find no such complaint with reference to a vessel named the Masconomo, but had discovered that the German Embassy had made a complaint with reference to the British ship Carnovan, which was almost identical with the complaint concerning the Masconomo, although the location of the alleged offence was different from that described in the affidavit given to the press by the German Information Service.

On Saturday officials of the department said that the complaint against the Masconomo had been received and was being investigated. A further investigation to-day, however, disclosed that they had confused the case with that of the complaint against the Carnovan. It was said at the department, after an examination of the records, that no representations concerning the alleged misuse of the United States flag by the Masconomo had been received by the department from the German Embassy." The department, it was said, had received a complaint from the German Embassy that the British steamer Carnovan had been at Nassau, Bahama Islands, and in waters in that vicinity disguised as an American vessel. It was charged that she had displayed large signs bearing the name "Texas." The name alleged to have been used by the Masconomo was "Texas." An inquiry was sent by telegraph to Nassau, but the United States naval telegraph censor at Key West did not understand that it was official and held it up. There was some delay in obtaining information on that account, but the State Department finally got its telegram through Nassau. The answer was to the effect that the Carnovan had not been at Nassau or in its vicinity at the time described in the German complaint and,, furthermore, no ship disguised as the German communication had described had been in those waters.

The question now is: Where is the affidavit of Fenner, which the German information Service gave to the press with a statement that a photographic copy of it had been filed with the State Department. The representations made to the department by the German Embassy in the case of the Carnivan approximated so closely the allegations contained in the German information Service statement that the mystery becomes deeper. An explanation seems to be due from the German information Service as to whether the Masconomo or the Carnovan was meant in the charge that the former vessel had disguised herself as the American ship Texas.

CHAS. M. SCHWAB'S SALARY

The report in a western paper that Charles M. Schwab received a million dollars salary as head of the United States Steel Corporation needs correction, says the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. Schwab did receive the largest salary ever paid outside the domain of European kings and emperors, but it was not paid by the United States Steel Corporation.

On the contrary, Mr. Schwab's contract with Mr. Carnegie called for so large a sum as to be a stumbling block in the organization of the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. Schwab thereupon promptly cancelled it and headed the United States Steel Corporation at a far less salary and just as Mr. Morgan wished. A few days later Mr. Morgan explained to Mr. Carnegie how nicely Mr. Schwab had acted. Mr. Carnegie was astonished. He would never consent that Mr. Schwab should not have the full amount Mr. Carnegie had by contract guaranteed him.

The next day Mr. Schwab was equally astonished to receive from Mr. Carnegie a check for several millions in settlement for his full guaranteed salary during the life of his contract.

The contract called for an annual payment in salary and profit-sharing guaranteed to be not less than one million dollars per annum.

Notes About Note Paper.

Pure white stationery is always suitable, but for the debutante an exquisitely tinted paper is in good taste. This can be had in salmon, oyster blue and Dresden. Sometimes the salmon has a dull rose line and the oyster blue a cadet blue line around the edge.

Formerly a monogram was engraved in a corresponding shade in the corner of the sheet, but fashion no longer requires this, for the engraved initials are meant to stay.

The ordinary correspondence card has fallen into disfavor, yet one attractive style for those who prefer the card to note paper is being used. It has about one inch of the card folded back to form a flap, and the monogram is in the center of the flap.

A new style of paper for engraved formal invitations and receptions is the panel sheet. An impressed border about half an inch wide runs around the edge, and the paper itself is long and rather narrow. Although more expensive than the usual formal style, it is distinguished in appearance.

Sealing wax is still in vogue and offers much in the way of charm in the appearance of a letter.

Recruiting Rally In Baldwin Ward

Interesting and Stirring Addresses Songs and Music by the Band

The attendance at the Baldwin ward Recruiting Rally last night, was the largest yet. Over eight hundred men women and children were there. sitting on chairs, or standing on the beautiful lawn.

Mr. E. J. Butler acted as chairman in a capable manner. In his opening remarks, he thanked the audience for their attendance, and explained the aim of the meeting,—to make the people appreciate the position the nation is in, and to stimulate recruiting.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn

Mr. O'Flynn, when called upon, spoke right to the point, and was listened to with the more eagerness as he has a son, (Capt. O'Flynn) over in Flanders fighting for the Empire. "A great national crisis," said the speaker, "arises only once in a while, one of them is now tonight." Why were the men there in safety, with their wives and daughters? Because the English navy is keeping the German navy, that it took them 40 years to build, shut up in the Kiel Canal; turned them into canal-boats. What was their duty? Because there were no Germans in Canada, were they to stand with folded hands, saying "it is none of our business' "No; out on the person that thinks that way. He is not worthy of the name of Briton, he is a poltroon, a traitor," (applause). If Germany had its way, Canada would be treated like Belgium. The boys that don't rally to the colours will regret it all their lives," Mr. O'Flynn mentioned an incident where a man came to him, to settle any little money he had on his wife, preparatory to leaving for the front. When he (the speaker) wished him the best of luck, the man said, "Mr. O'Flynn, I do not expect to return."

"The Canadian," went on the speaker, "who goes to the front willing to give his life's blood, and give up family, friendships and break other ties, comes up to the old high standard of British bravery.". There were more terrible things than going to the front; it is far worse to fall through dissipation. They wanted to honour those who interested themselves in the saving of our country and all that is best and good. They needed more knowledge of the great emergency that faces our country, to give them unity. When they were fully united in this common cause, thousands more of young Canadians would enlist, and the Canadians could always be depended on.

Belleville and the County of Hastings had nothing to be proud of. They had not stood up with other townships and cities of equal size. They had been so self-centred that they had no time for the national danger. But the Belleville boys who had gone had proven equal to the best. They were boys to be proud of,—all trumps. Those who left now, deserve double praise, for they know their danger and were bravely facing it. This war makes men of the boys who went.

"We must send on a never ending stream of reinforcements," concluded the speaker "to drive the heathen back. Stand by the right, send on our boys. God will protect them, and in the future, when we tell of the part, Belleville took in the Big War, it will be with honest pride and satisfaction." (Applause).

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P.,

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., gave a very interesting address which was listened to with close interest. He said in part:—

The anniversary of the declaration of war on August third naturally causes the man concerned about the future of Canada and the Empire to regard with seriousness the mighty task which the allied nations set out to accomplish. Every body reads the newspapers and knows, so far as we are permitted to learn, (and there is wisdom in the reticence maintained) how matters are progressing.

The British Navy, the Empire's shield and insurer, silent, unsleeping and as yet unchallenged, keeping the stern vigil of the lonely sea, has reduced Germany's great ships of war to the condition of canal boats, and has swept its merchant vessels from every ocean, so that its sea-borne commerce is absolutely cut off. A fine example of the power of our Navy may now be seen in New York harbour where the great passenger ships of the North German Lloyd Company lie idle and useless in their berths, which they dare not leave. The navy is giving safe convoy to the three millions of soldiers who are being transported across the Channel to the battle fields of France; and is more powerful in men, ships and munitions than at any previous period. Half of the merchant shipping of the world is British, yet, notwithstanding this enormous target, less than one per cent. has been captured or destroyed.

The British Army, small as it was at the beginning of the war, saved France from the fate of Belgium and put an effective stop log against the seizure of Paris. Its numbers have grown by voluntary enlistment from 180,000 to 3,000,000 men of all arms, which includes the stalwart men from Canada, who held their ground with a magnificent display of tenacity and courage at the battle of Ypres, where their bearing and conduct saved the day and averted a disaster which might have led to the capture of Calais and the subsequent invasion of England. They are acclaimed by the Empire and are honored by the world, notably in the press and among the citizens of the United States, who declare that the Canadians engaged in the war have raised the status of Canada to that of a nation, that she has proved her right to exist and is fully and finally accepted. While becoming modesty will cause us here at home to refrain from repeating what has been said abroad, that the Canadian is the best fighting man in the European war, we will be content to say, there is no better. He has stood the acid test. In St. Paul's Cathedral in London, the crypt of which contains the tombs of Wellington and Nelson and Roberts, there assembled on a week evening in May one of the largest and most distinguished audiences that ever gathered in that historic church of the British race; the King and Queen were there, surrounded by the great ministers of state within the choir, while under the magnificent dome and crowded into the naves and galleries and extending beyond the doors into the street were men and women representing every phase of the nation's life, all specially assembled to celebrate in connection with the solemn worship of Almighty God the splendid deeds accomplished on behalf of the Empire and for the cause of freedom in the world by the soldiers of Canada.

For the Belleville and Hastings men who responded to the first call and formed part of that marvellous Canadian army that enlisted, trained and was in the midst of the fray, in the thickest of the fight, within a few months after the declaration of war, for those men who represent you and me in the struggle for the continuance of British freedom, and British justice and for the defence of mankind against German tyranny, German atrocities, German slavery and German oppression, I have formed for every one of them personal esteem, admiration and gratitude. Pat and Ted Yeomans, manly lads from childhood, Capt. Dick Ponton, Capt. Ed. O'Flynn who and Jack Panter set aside business, pleasure and attractive and happy surroundings to perform their duty, which was no more theirs than others, and, mark this every body, these fine examples of the native born had the consent and blessing of their noble mothers. Other fine fellows I might name who also have a warm place in our hearts but time would not suffice to mention them all, not even those from the local service of the Grand Trunk who went with the first contingent from the train crews, from the shops, from the road and from the offices; among the latter I am proud to say were half a dozen young men from British Guiana, South America, and the West Indies, graduates of Ontario Business College.

The men who are risking their lives for us leave their women and children as a sacred trust to the nation, and right well are the Government and people fulfilling that great obligation. This is a war of attrition. Britain has the men, the instruments and the money to wear down the enemy. She is just girding up her loins for the supreme effort that will conquer. There will be a roll call by and bye of men who can say, "I was there." Get into the game, young men, while there is yet a chance for participation and for honour. When you come back you will easily push aside the slacker and the shirker when competing for the customers, the positions and the possessions that Canada will be offering in every line of industry, not only in business and in the trades but in professional practice and in the service of the Governments. I predict that the man who served will be the man preferred. Liberty is the richest gift that life can give; if you make it sure for us and, in addition, guarantee the possession of our property, the title deeds to our farms and homes, save Canada from invasion, our women from dishonour and our children from cruelty at the hands of a horde of barbarians and a band of incendiaries, if you do all these things who can appraise the national and individual debt that we shall owe to you, and which by the help of God, we pledge ourselves to pray.

This is a meeting to promote recruiting. As a member of the committee that undertook to make an effort to arouse a greater interest, a necessary interest, I am here to perform that duty. Plain speech is needed. My appeal is to the native born. You are in the enjoyment of the greatest heritage on earth. Your birthright was secured for you in the distant past by the shedding of British blood, the sacrifice of British life and the expenditure of British treasure, and you can only retain it, and safeguard it, and transmit it, by being willing to repeat the example of the men to whom you owe this land. If, without legitimate excuse, you shirk that duty you will deserve the fate of the coward. To the parents of the native born I venture to say with great respect, that you have no right to shelter your sons behind other parents' sons, and if you seek to prevent a patriotic son who sees his plain duty and is eager to perform it from enlisting he will be justified in resisting your authority. The serious peril facing the country is the supreme cause now; nothing else can be allowed to stand in the way of the Empire's defence. Unwillingness to enlist by the native born in the United States during the Civil War was overcome by drafting men for the army by compulsion. Young men, don't wait for the draft. See the recruiting officer to-morrow and get into training at once.

"All we have of freedom, all we use or know. This our fathers bought for us long and long ago."

At the meeting at which the recruiting campaign was started and also at other meetings of men for patriotic purposes those present were often obliged to ask what men are holding back who should be with us in our efforts. We wondered at the indifference of some of the ministers and still have cause to wonder. It is not too late for their influence to be exerted, the cause needs it and who should render more willing or could render greater service? Now all together; it is victory or destruction. Any sacrifice will be as nothing compared with the conditions that defeat would bring. A man who runs away from such a duty as is now upon this land can never again be a comfortable companion to himself. If he skulks when he should be fighting or in some way doing his bit he has lost honour and self-respect.

COLONEL PONTON

Lieut.-Col. Ponton as usual gave a stirring patriotic speech, touching the fighting sense of everyone present. The Colonel had some of the latest recruiting posters from England, and spoke largely from them. The posters were all very brief and right to the point, such as "Remember the Lusitania," "It is your flag,—fight for it, work for it," "England expects every man to do his duty," and others. In connection with the latter poster Col. Ponton gave it a more personal turn by changing it to "Belleville expects every man to do his duty."

In the course of his address, the Colonel remarked that no more appropriate place for recruiting purposes could be found than that school named after that womanly Queen and queenly woman, Queen Victoria. Col. Ponton presented certificates to cadets who had passed in signalling, giving a pleasant word with each certificate. The cadets gave up nights of pleasure for good hard practise he said, and deserved credit. Those presented with the certificates were the following cadets:

J. Frawley, B. Colling, B. Tower, C. S. Sneyd, F. Deacon and E. Maiden.

In speaking of the war, the Colonel said that Britain was a constructive, not a destructive nation. "We are fighting a gallant fight for liberty—personal liberty, so that the Hun will never put foot in Canada, on the land consecrated by the U. E. Loyalists. The mother's sacrifice is greatest, but when she say 'Go,' her boy goes with his mother's benediction to fight for a just cause. Let us see that our lines of communications are not cut, and the way to do that, is to supply a stream of living men. The boys going out now, go with every arrangement made for their comfort. We are sending our boys out now, as a few years ago, we coaxed them in." The Colonel concluded by explaining in what way the young ladies could assist recruiting.

COL. KETCHESON.

Col. Ketcheson spoke a few words, saying he was sure no young man would have the nerve to stay at home now, after what had previously been said, and he fully expected fifty or more recruits on the following day. Some excuses that had sufficed are now wiped away by the new rules that had been passed. Col. Ketcheson explained them.

Many thanks and much credit is due to those who helped make the evening a success. The 15th Regimental Band, who provided music gratis, Mr. Mills, caretaker of the school, Greenleaf and son, who provided electrical fixtures, Miss Anna Ponton, Mr. Fred Burke, Mr. J. N. Doyle, who gave several spendid songs, and Mrs. Duff, who kindly acted as accompanist.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Wheat sagged in value today, owing largely to prospects of a bearish crop report from Washington. As a matter of fact, however, the government figures, which were made public after trading hours, did not prove so big as the more radical bears had predicted. Closing prices were unsettled at ¼c to ⅝c rise to ⅝c net decline. Corn closed ⅛c to ¼c to ⅝c down, and oats off ⅛c to 1¼c to 1¾c. In provisions the outcome was 2½c to 27½c advance.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 9.—Favorable weather conditions in the Canadian west and reports of an improvement in the weather south caused lower prices on the grain market today. The decline for the day on wheat was 1⅛c to 1⅜c.

Oats were lower at opening and were easier later. Flax was quiet, and only a few transactions were recorded at easier values than Saturday's closing price. The demand for cash wheat, Nos 1, 2, 3 and 4 grades, was good, and offerings are less daily. There was no enquiry for oats, while there was limited enquiry for barley and flax. The buyers of wheat were exporters principally.

Wheat futures closed 1⅛c to 1⅜c lower: cash wheat, ½c to 1c higher: oats ⅝c lower, and flax 2c down.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Aug. 9.—The enquiry for Manitoba spring wheat from over the cable today was better, and as prices were more in line sales of several loads of old crop grades were made for nearby shipment and a few loads of new crop October-November were sold. The market for oats was weaker and prices declined ½c to 1c per bushel, with a moderate amount of business in carlots. A car of new crop Quebec No. 2 white oats were offered for shipment this week, for which 53c was bid and refused. Argentine corn sold at 86½c. New crop spring wheat flour in demand. Millfeed in good demand and scarce. Butter lower, ¼c to ½c per pound. Eggs fairly firm. Cheese steady.

THIN PEOPLE CAN INCREASE WEIGHT

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say, and think, the scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and most any thin man or woman can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all the new flesh stays put Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food, it turns the fats sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepares it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. All this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol stops the waste and does it quickly and makes the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. J. S. McKeown and other leading druggists in Belleville and vicinity sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Crossing the Channel.

What landing at Sandwich was like in 1533 we learn from Hubertus, the envoy of the Palsgrave Frederick to Henry VIII., whose story is given in Mrs. Henry Cust's "Gentlemen Errant." Hubertus was detained for a week at Calais by stormy weather and had a terrible time when he finally hired a ship and crossed. A young Englishman compelled the sailors to do their duty by ropes' ends and threats of death, and taught Hubertus, who was "middling seasick," to pump out the water, which he did "till at the break of morning the winds fell, and we saw the mountains of England spread out before us." They found themselves off Sandwich (that mountainous district) and were taken off the ship in small boats and carried "on neck or back" to land.—London Chronicle.

The Moth and the Flame.

A naturalist states that a moth—and for that matter many other insects—will fly toward a flame for the same reason that a plant seeks the light. Insects, it seems, move in the direction of the light rays that fall upon them. But the light must be of considerable intensity to produce a marked result. Toward a feeble glare the insect would move but leisurely, but in the case of a concentrated light like the flame of a candle or lamp the insect travels with great rapidity to its death.

Care of the Ear.

Never be alarmed if a living insect enters the ears. Pouring warm water into the canal will drown it, when it will generally come to the surface and can easily be removed by the fingers. A few puffs of tobacco smoke blown into the ear will stupefy the insect. Never meddle with the ear if a foreign body, such as a bead, button or seed enters it. Leave it absolutely alone, but have a physician attend to it. More damage has been done by injudicious attempts at the extraction of a foreign body than could ever come from its presence in the ear.—Health.

Attacked In Front and Rear.

A youngster of our acquaintance who has a faculty for getting into scrapes recently expressed the wish that he was a postage stamp. When asked why, he answered, "Because a postage stamp can only be licked once," whereupon we pointed out that the stamp received, besides the licking, a severe punch in the face.—Boston Transscript.

Racing In Mongolia.

Horse racing is taken seriously in Mongolia, where it is carried on under the auspices of the Buddhist priests. The races are rarely less than ten miles long, and the chief event of the Mongolian racing year is a contest over thirty miles of rough steppe. When C. W. Campbell visited Mongolia he attended a race meeting, at which most of the competing horses were owned by lamas.

"The great races which take place yearly at Urga," he writes, "are held under the direct patronage of the lama pope of Mongolia, who becomes the owner of all the winners. A horse race with a bishop in the judges' box, a public chiefly clerical, no bookmakers or betting and nominal prizes is a phenomenon in its way."

There Ain't No Such Animile.

"Why don't you engage her as cook?"

"She signed her letter of application, 'Your obedient servant.'"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Quite Logical.

Teacher—Freddie, why do you spell bank with such a large "B?" Freddie—'Cause pa said that a bank was no good unless it had a large capital!

MILITARY MATTERS.

The ward recruiting meetings being held in Belleville are most successful. The failure of the first seemed to be due to the fact that it was hastily arranged and insufficiently advertised. All the meetings since then have been well attended, and the people are showing that they are fully alive to the importance of the occasion. That the meetings have been successful from the main point of view is evidenced by the steady flow of recruits who are being enrolled. The patriotic pleadings of the speakers have not been in vain.

Military men do not seem to take kindly to the proposal emanating from Ottawa, to train four divisions of Canadian troops in England and France instead of the two divisions at present kept there. The proposal means that recruits would be equipped here, but would be sent to England to be trained. A senior officer, recently returned from the front, is stated by the Toronto Star as saying that the rule established by the War Office, that 80 per cent. of the number at the front should be in training in England, is absolutely necessary in view of the fact that divisions must be constantly reinforced. But he declares that there was no object in having more than that number in training in England. He cannot see why troops could not be brought up to the point of going into the firing line in Canada. We have the natural facilities for training men; any equipment that we lack can be either manufactured or brought over from England.

Besides, it is to our commercial advantage that men should be fed and spend their money here rather than in England. The presence in Belleville of the 39th Battalion was a distinct advantage to the tradespeople of the city. It meant the expenditure every week of a considerable sum for provisions, besides the little personal expenses of the men themselves, which in the case of a body of men, a thousand strong, amount to an appreciable sum in the course of a few weeks. Belleville would be only too pleased to see another battalion mobilised in the city.

There is another point with regard to military matters, recently put forward, which deserves some consideration. Several of the Canadian officers at the front have protested against fulsome and exaggerated praise of their conduct in the field. The protest is what one might expect from men who went not forth for gain or glory, but to serve their country in a righteous war. Their remonstrance probably refers to some comments which have appeared in American papers principally, to the effect that Canadians have proved themselves the best fighters in the war. Having made this statement "they lay the flattering unction to their souls" that Canadians are Americans because they live on the American continent! It is invidious praise which is not fair to the British, the French, or the Belgian troops, who have all shown such heroic bravery in the field.

Canadians went to the war to do their duty, and in one notable battle, which Canadians will always recall with pride, they did more than their duty—they saved the situation. They certainly have done better than was expected of them, although we all knew they would not disgrace their colors. But to make invidious comparisons as to the prowess of the Canadians, by describing them as the best fighting men in the war, is to draw attention to the fact that three-parts of them were born in the Old Country. One English woman writes that while she has no desire to take away the glory of Canadians she thinks people should classify the casualty lists. "They would then," she says, "find that in 101 killed in the Canadian forces, 59 were born in the British Isles and 42 in Canada. It would appear that residence in Canada makes a Britisher a wonderful fighter." "To draw invidious comparisons," (says the Montreal Herald) "such as are made so frequently in the press of this country, is unfair, unjust and ridiculous. Canada may take sufficient pride in the fact that her soldiers are the equals of their comrades in arms without reaching out for some illusive superiority." If our men rise to the level of robust manliness shown by the British, French and Belgians—as they have done—we can have no stronger claim to glory.

As one consequence of the world war and of the plucky resistance which the Armenians at Van made to the Kurds and Turks, the vilayet of Van is now independent of Turkey and is under a government selected by her own people. Certainly the Armenians deserve independence, for no people have suffered more at the hands of the Turks.

Warsaw is commonly referred to as "the City of the Broken Heart." Since 1609 it has been the capital of Poland. Five times in its history it has been overrun by hostile armies: Sweden in 1655 and 1702, Russia in 1764 and 1794, and Napoleon in 1806. The historic city came fully under Russian rule in 1813.—Brantford Courier.

Khaki should be honored as the garb of men who are on active service or who are going on active service. Khaki has become as sacred in the sight of Britishers as the robes of a priest, and khaki should not be associated with the far from martial forms of purchasing agents and civil servants who will never see a shot fired in anger.—Toronto Telegram.

It is said that in Holland the decision of the United States on the question of exporting war material to belligerents is awaited with much anxiety. The Dutch say that a small nation would be at the mercy of a bigger one if it were not permitted to buy war material from neutrals. That is a point worth some notice in the discussions of the question, though the decision of the United States on the subject already has been made and is not likely to be changed.—Buffalo Express.

Some needed inventions:—A rocking chair that will murmur "Step to the right" when you are about to fall over it in the dark. An electric collar button that will automatically light up when it escapes you and disappears under the bed. A jitney bus that will become a flying machine when it finds itself in danger of flying into anything. A latch-key with a magnet attachment that will invariably find the key-hole. A square-brimmed straw hat that may blow off, but will not roll away.

If war is the greatest employer of labor, it also is the greatest destroyer of labor. Seven hundred thousand of the flower of Germany's workers are dead, and two millions of them have been crippled in a single year. The war seems destined to continue for at least another year, and it will certainly not be less deadly in its results. This being so, Germany's adult male population of probably 15,000,000 will have been reduced by four millions of incapables and dependents, and nearly two million of dead, or more than one-third.—London Free Press.

The Poet's Corner

THE BRAVE AT HOME.

The maid who binds her warrior's sash,
With smile that well her pain dissembles,
The while beneath her drooping lash,
One starry tear-drop hangs and trembles,
Though Heaven alone records the tear,
And Fame shall never know her story,
Her heart has shed a drop as dear
As e'er bedewed the field of glory!

The wife who girds her husband's sword,
'Mid little ones who weep or wonder
And bravely speaks the cheering word
What though her heart be rent asunder,
Doomed nightly in her dreams to hear
The bolts of death around him rattle,
Hath shed as sacred blood as e'er
Was poured upon the field of battle!

The mother who conceals her grief,
While to her breast her son she presses,
Then breathes a few brave words and brief
Kissing the patriot brow she blesses
With no one but her secret God
To know the pain that weighs upon her,
Sheds holy blood as e'er the sod
Received on Freedom's field of honor!

SULLIVAN VS. BARLEYCORN

ASHBURY PARK, N.J., August 10.—John L. Sullivan entered the ring here again tonight with John Barleycorn as his opponent. There were five hundred persons who had ringside seats at 50 cents each and they cheered the old champion heartily. Sullivan has gone on a lecture tour for temperance and this was his first speech. His appeal was particularly to young men.

"I was a boozer for 25 years," he said, "and John Barleycorn it was who knocked me out as a fighter. I quit ten years ago. The only way you can beat old John is to climb out of the ring."

Sullivan said that he had spent the past ten years in travelling and he declared he found a big sentiment for prohibition.

TWO DIVISIONS ABROAD OF CANADIAN TROOPS

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—Upwards of 80,000 Canadian soldiers have already been despatched abroad for service in the war. Of these nearly 13,000 have appeared in the casualty lists, so that there are still 67,000 men in England and in France. This comprises two divisions for service, one of which has already received its baptism of fire and has been reorganized and reinforced at least twice, and the other of which has been in training at Shorncliffe and should soon be ready for service at the front. In addition, the 67,000 will provide a large number of reinforcements when needed. In Canada, it is estimated, there are between sixty and sixty-five thousand men in the various camps, many of whom are already in a high state of efficiency.

It is considered probable that four divisions of Canadian troops will be abroad at an early date, two divisions for service at the front and two to undergo training and provide drafts of reinforcements. The present method of sending drafts when required from Canada is in some respects unsatisfactory, as it breaks up the units from which the drafts are taken, and in some degree destroys the esprit de corps of the troops.

WAR STORIES

Stirring Incidents of the Battlefield Told by the Soldiers Themselves

CANADIANS DOING SPLENDID WORK.

In a letter received by a relative at Port Hope, from Colonel Victor Williams, of the British Expeditionary Force, 2nd Army Corps, he says:

The War Office sent me over here to be on the General Staff of the Army Corps, to which the Canadians are attached. I have everything to do with the Canadians, and have to visit them daily and all their trenches, etc. I have had many narrow escapes, as I am obliged to go to all the dangerous points, to see that things are secure from attack, etc. I am enjoying it very much indeed, and have to thank the "War Office" for my work. This is certainly a dreadful war and no one can tell when it will end. We are now preparing for another winter's campaign, much to the disgust of all ranks; but it must be done, and the war carried to a successful issue. I cannot begin to describe things to you, as I am not allowed to even tell you where I am. Our Canadians have done, and are doing, splendid work, but at a tremendous sacrifice. Every day brings its toll of dead and wounded. We have really no big show on at present, but there is continual fighting along the whole front and especially so, each afternoon about five o'clock, when the guns begin to pour out thunder, etc. We call that the "Afternoon Hate." At that hour and time everyone takes cover as best they can, as shells drop all over the country and it is not known at what point they will drop next, as the German has the big gun range down to a fine point and seems to know just where we are. There are so many spies here and how they get back information to the Germans is beyond our knowledge. Now and again we catch one and it does not take long to put him where he belongs.

I know full well that you women of Canada are doing all you can to make us happy out here. We have trying times, but it is all for the Empire and humanity. We shall, and must win, as we surely must have God on our side. If you could only see the misery caused by those infernal brutes, it would make your heart ache. To see those poor old women and young children made miserable by losing everything that they ever had in this world—to hear of the killing of women and children in cold blood—the burning of whole towns and villages. Can anyone call the German human? I could tell of other things, but will spare you.

DOMINION WILL HELP BUILDING OF TERMINUS

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—The basis of an agreement between the Government and the Toronto Terminal Company has been reached and it is probable that it will be ratified on the return of Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works.

By the agreement the Government agrees to bear the cost of construction of the eastern wing of the new Union Station building. The wing will comprise the Government offices and the postoffice.

Cars containing apparatus for disinfecting the clothing and baggage of passengers who have been exposed to contagious diseases have been put into service by an Italian railroad.

THE GROWTH OF RURAL MAIL DURING YEARS 1911 TO 1915

An Increase of 800 Per Cent. Under Present Administration.

Comparative Statement of Boxholders and Delivery Routes.

THE growth of rural mail delivery under the present Federal Government has been very rapid in contrast with the advance made during previous years. Practically the whole of Prince Edward Island and all of Old Ontario is now served by this system, while in Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick a great advance has been made in bringing prompt mail delivery to the farm. On the prairie and in British Columbia this necessary service has also been widely extended.

An Increase of 800 Per Cent.

When the Conservatives took office in 1911, they found only 16,015 families being served by rural mail delivery. Last March, the number was 127,407, an increase of 800 per cent.

HON. T. CHASE CASGRAIN, Postmaster-General.
—Sketch by McConnell.

The following tables indicate how the energetic and progressive postal policy inaugurated by Hon. L. P. Pelletier and continued with even greater energy by Hon. T. Chase Casgrain, has brought a prompt and regular mail service to the farms in all parts of Canada:

Borden the First Imperial Statesman

When Sir Robert Borden sat in council with the British Cabinet it was a definite recognition of Canada's new status in the Empire. Sir Robert was the first statesman from the Overseas Dominion to have such an honor conferred upon him. That it is evident an Imperial Constitution will be the result is indicated by this statement made in the British Parliament by Hon. Arthur H. Steel-Maitland, Under-Secretary for the Colonies:

> "It is intended to take the responsible Ministers of the Colonies into our confidence in regard to every matter during the war and also of matters which may arise at the end of the war on the question of settlement of peace. That is the reason why Sir Robert Borden was present the other day at a meeting of the Cabinet. When I hear objections taken by some hon. members to that or to further developments in that direction on the ground that the Dominions should not be involved in the European war, I think it shows a lack of analysis or of imagination. I cannot imagine the Dominions being further involved in European politics than they are at present by their voluntary action."

To British statesman and Canadian statesman the Empire has added Imperial statesman. Sir Robert Borden is the first Imperial statesman from the Overseas Dominions. He has seen the consummation of his prophecy and policy—Canada a partner instead of a ward of Great Britain.

Customs' Revenue Shows an Increase

July Customs revenue amounted to $7,492,621, or $431,259 more than the corresponding period last year. As July, 1914, was an anti-bellum month it is evident that the new tariff measures of Hon. W. T. White designed to check the decline in revenue have been successful. So far all comparisons have been between months during the war this year and those before the war last year, when ocean transportation facilities had not been interrupted. August returns will afford the first comparison between months in this and the last fiscal year under the same conditions. For the remaining eight months of the present fiscal year it is expected that a very substantial increase in revenue will be shown over the corresponding period in the last fiscal year. Beginning in September, 1914, the revenue declined very rapidly owing to the disruption in transatlantic freight due to the war, and also the uncertainty of the business situation. A return to normal conditions will see an immense increase in revenue, and the July figures clearly indicate that the import trade is being rapidly re-established.

A Worthy Cause That Needs Money

Very generous have been the contributions to the various funds that have been created to assist our soldiers and their dependents. To the patriotic fund used to assist the dependents of those doing service in the Canadian army many millions have been contributed and for a supply of machine guns the response has been wonderful.

There is another worthy cause—probably that most entitled to support—the Hospital Commission, presided over by Hon. Senator Lougheed. The object of the commission is to care for our sick and wounded returning from service. Many public-spirited citizens have placed their country homes at the disposal of the commission, and to these will be sent the returned soldiers until their health is fully recovered. But although the Government's provision for this work is ample, and the pensions to be paid generous, there will be many cases where further assistance will be required. If the commission had at its disposal funds, they could supplement the amounts received by soldiers in cases where extra aid is required.

As a substitute for the door mat there has been invented a device provided with horizontal brushes to remove dust from the soles and tops of shoes and the bottoms of trousers as well.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

Care of the Baby In Summer

Bottle Feeding.

The first and most important thing to do for a baby is to find the right food for him. When for any reason he is deprived of the one "right" food, his mother's milk, some substitute must be found. Experience in feeding many thousands of babies in this and other countries has shown that clean, fresh cow's milk is the only food that can be depended upon to take the place of breast milk with even a fair degree of success.

In order to have milk that is clean enough for a baby's food, the greatest care must be taken to keep it clean from the time it is drawn from the cow until it goes into the baby's mouth. If a cow is kept on the place it should be possible for the mother to see that the cow is brushed clean before being milked, that the teats and udder are washed before the milking begins, that the hands and clothing of the milker are clean and that a partly covered milk pail is used, which has been scalded with boiling water before use.

It is sometimes advisable to boil the milk, especially in hot summer weather. Usually the method of treatment called pasteurization renders it safe. Here is a simple method of pasteurizing:

Put a gallon of water over the fire in a large kettle. When the water is boiling hard remove the kettle and let it stand uncovered for ten minutes. Stand the filled and corked bottles in the hot water, cover the kettle and allow it to stand for half an hour. Remove the bottles and cool them, under running water if possible, until they are cold, and keep them on ice or where they will be cold until needed.

Perfect cleanliness must be observed in making up the baby's feedings. The mother's hands should be washed clean, and she should wear a clean apron. All the dishes and articles to be used should have been boiled before being used, and as far as possible they should be kept for the baby's use alone. Milk is very readily tainted by being put into dishes in which food has been cooked. If convenient have on hand a kettle large enough to hold eight nursing bottles at a time, a two quart bowl or pitcher to hold the milk mixture, a funnel through which to pour it into the bottles, a long handled spoon to stir it with, a bottle brush, enough nursing bottles and nipples for all the nursings in twenty-four hours, and the same number of new corks. A graduated measuring glass is a convenience, but a nursing bottle having a scale in ounces blown in one side may be used instead.

It is most important that the bottles shall be kept cold from the time the milk is prepared until it is used. Here is a cheap and effective icebox:

Use a lard or candy bucket or a wooden box for the outside receptacle. In the bottom put a layer of sawdust an inch thick. In the middle of this box place an eight quart tin pail with a cover and fill all the space around it with sawdust. Inside this pail put the ice and the bottles and cover both the inner pail and the outer box. If the ice is broken up and put into a small covered pail which is set inside the refrigerator it will keep longer than when it is not thus protected. If the outer box has a cover on hinges, as will be most convenient, a thick layer of newspapers may be tacked to the underside of the cover. Or a cushion stuffed with hay, straw, excelsior or sawdust, made to fit the cover of the box, may be fastened to it. If properly made this little device will keep the baby's bottles sweet for twenty-four hours with very little ice, provided they are very cold when put in.

When it is time to feed the baby take one of the bottles out of the icebox and put it in a small pail or pan of water over the fire to heat. The water should come up to the milk line on the bottle. Do not make the milk too hot. The mother may test the heat by sprinkling a few drops on the inner surface of her arm; when it feels just comfortably warm to her skin it will be right for the baby.

After the feeding is finished, remove the bottle at once and empty out any milk that may be left. Rinse it with cool water and leave it filled with water. At some convenient time wash the bottles with warm soap and water using the bottle brush to scrub them clean inside. Rinse thoroughly and put them over the fire to boil. The kettle used for pasteurizing may be used for this purpose. The water should cover the bottles and they should be boiled for fifteen minutes. They may stay in the water until the feedings are made up. Wash and boil the corks at the same time.

To clean the nipples, wash and scrub them in warm soapy water. A little common salt rubbed on the inside will remove the milk. Rinse well and drop them into boiling water for five minutes. They will dry with their own heat when removed and should be put away dry, in a dry glass jar, which has been boiled with the bottles. Cover the jar and keep it out of the light. Handle the nipples only by the lower edge, and never by the top, which is to go into the baby's mouth, and guard especially against flies, which like nothing better than to swarm over the baby's bottle and nipple. If this happens, put on a fresh nipple before feeding the baby. Flies are a deadly enemy to humanity.

A Queen Of Beauty

By F. A. MITCHEL

Madeline Hollister stood before the glass, a startled, a frightened, expression on her face. One would suppose that she saw the reflection of a skeleton looking over her shoulder.

Miss Hollister had enjoyed the reputation of being the beauty of the place in which she lived for ten years. Her comeliness was remarked upon when she was fifteen; three years later she was the acknowledged belle of her social circle, and her fame began to be spread abroad. She was now twenty-eight and was considered more beautiful than ever.

What Miss Hollister saw in the mirror that appalled her was a tiny crow's foot under her left eye.

Miss Hollister sank back on a lounge and, buried in many pillows, gave herself up to thought. Should she not accept her fate, marry one of the men who wanted her and pass from a social belle to wifehood, motherhood? She shrank from what she considered the abandonment of sovereignty to accept ordinary humdrum. There were many men from whom to choose, and there would be no trouble in making a choice. Clarence Beale had loved her from the time she came to womanhood. He was her favorite of all her suitors, and nothing had prevented their marriage except that matrimony would curtail her realm.

Madeline arose and stood again before the glass. Since she had stood there before the sun had passed behind the branch of a tree, and the light was not so intense. She looked for the wrinkle, but under the lesser light it was not apparent.

A respite—another year at least remained to her before abdicating as queen of beauties. As soon as her skin ceased to bear an ordinary light she would resign her position, marry and content herself as queen of home and children. But not yet. No. She could not yet bear to step down from a position that was a part of her being.

A year passed, and she stood again before her mirror. The sun was in the same relative position as when she had discovered the first mark of decay. The line had grown deeper, and other lines radiated from it.

"Another year," she sighed, "and I must abdicate or be deposed."

When still another year had passed and the lines were multiplying it occurred to her that she might add to the period of her reign by the aid of cosmetics. She applied them. To her they seemed to effect the intended purpose. But they were noticed by others, and it began to be whispered about among women that Miss Hollister's beauty was fading. But these whispers did not reach the ears of the queen of beauty.

If the wrinkles did not show under a bright light the cosmetics did. No longer was that milky, peachy complexion present to excite the admiration of the world. But Miss Hollister was not aware of the change. Her eyes were so constantly fixed upon the reflection of her face that she did not remark the very gradual shriveling of the skin.

One thing she did notice—that the looks of admiration to which she had been so long accustomed grew less intense, then less frequent. At first she refused to be convinced that her beauty had faded and that the world knew it.

"My time is up," she said at last. "I must abdicate."

She sent for Clarence Beale. He came, but the lovelight that she had believed would shine forever for her in his eyes was wanting. She could not say that she was ready to marry him, but she indicated it by her manner. He failed to respond. When he took leave of her she felt that time had hardened his heart toward her. He was forty; she was thirty-seven. Later at the opera she saw him bend lovingly over a girl of twenty.

Miss Hollister now became panic stricken. Deposed as queen of beauty, she was fearful of being denied being queen of a home. One after another she recalled the lovers she had refused, only to learn that she had drawn them by her beauty, and that gone she had no other means of attracting them. Some of them had become old bachelors so set in their ways, so fearful of losing their liberty by marriage, that they dared not marry. Those who were minded to take partners were looking for women much younger than themselves.

One would suppose that the deposed queen of beauty would retire from the world. She did not. Perhaps she could not. Her costumes were as artistic as before, but whoever has seen an old woman in the bridal dress of her youth knows that the costume of youth intensifies age. Miss Hollister was thankful for any crumb of attention that was paid her. She grew old not in shadow, but in the limelight to which she had been so long accustomed and without which she could not live. Time had been when at social functions men had watched for an opportunity for a word with her; now when one was thrown into her company he was watching for an opportunity to get away.

Meanwhile those women who had envied her were interested in introducing their daughters.

Miss Hollister died at seventy at the foot of a social world at which she had for a single decade been at the head.

Care of the Baby In Summer

After Weaning the Baby.

After a mother has weaned her baby she is very apt to begin to give him "tastes" of various kinds of food. He is often brought to the table as soon as he is old enough to sit up in a high chair and offered bits of the family meal. In this way he soon has his appetite spoiled for the simple food which should satisfy him at this period—namely, milk, cereal, toast and the like. But a far more serious result of this haphazard method of feeding is that it is very apt to make the baby sick. It is not reasonable to suppose that a baby who has been fed almost exclusively on milk for the first nine months of his life can all at once begin to eat solid food of various kinds and not suffer any ill effects from it. The fact is that feeding at this period is hardly less important than in early infancy, and it is because so many mothers fail to realize this and make so many mistakes in the choice of food for the baby at this period that the "second summer" has gained an undeserved reputation for peril to him.

The mother is also apt to be making these experiments in feeding at the time when the baby is cutting his teeth and when, on account of the possible pain of teething, he is not as well able to digest his food as usual. On this account it is especially important at this time that the baby should have the right food in suitable quantities at proper intervals and no other way.

If, on the other hand, the mother realizes how important it is to take great pains with the baby's feeding at this period much of the illness which is popularly supposed to be necessary to the second summer will be prevented.

It is not true that this is a particularly dangerous time for the baby. The fact is that about five times as many babies die in the first year of life as in the second and that the majority die in the first three months.

Both the first and second summers of a baby's life are hard on him. Excessive heat alone is sufficient to make a baby sick, and even properly fed babies may suffer in this way, but it is far worse for those who are already sick from other causes, the chief of which is improper feeding.

The following food is suitable for a baby of nine months of age, in addition to the milk prepared as directed in the last article:

Strained orange or prune juice may be given once a day after the baby is eight or nine months old unless his bowels have a tendency to looseness. It should be given midway between feedings—for instance, if he is fed every four hours the juice is given two hours after a bottle feeding or nursing. It is best to begin with a small amount, say two or three teaspoonfuls, and to increase slowly till one to three tablespoonfuls are given daily.

At nine months he may be given beef juice, beef tea or plain mutton or chicken broth once a day.

At ten months he may have one to two tablespoonfuls of cereal once a day. Wheat preparations or farina may be used, either of which should be well cooked for at least three-quarters of an hour in a double boiler.

At ten months he may have a small piece of toast or zwieback or a crust of bread to chew immediately after his midday feeding.

At twelve months he may have cereal twice a day. If oatmeal is used it must be cooked for three hours and strained.

The following diet may be recommended for a child at twelve or thirteen months:

6 a. m.—Milk, 8-10 ounces.
8 a. m.—Orange juice, 1-3 tablespoonfuls.
10 a. m.—Cereal, one or two tablespoonfuls with milk or stale bread and zwieback with milk, 6-8 ounces.
2 p. m.—Broth with stale bread or beef juice, one ounce with breadcrumbs.
6 p. m.—Same as 10 a. m.
10 p. m.—Milk, 8 ounces.

Give the baby only one new article of food at a time and watch its effect very carefully. If the bowels are disturbed, or the baby vomits withdraw the new food altogether until the attack is over.

Begin with very small quantities of any new food and increase it very slowly if it suits the baby. In this way the baby is gradually taught to eat new articles of food and to digest them properly, without having to suffer from needless illness.

Never give a baby sirup or molasses, candy, cake, doughnuts, pork or tough meat of any kind, bananas, pickles, tea or coffee. Do not let him eat between meals, but give him all the cool drinking water he wants.

Good Advice on Hair Culture

How to Stop Falling Hair and Drive Away Dandruff

Once a day, if only for one minute, every woman and every man, too, for that matter, ought to rub the scalp vigorously with the tips of the fingers.

The blood supplies nourishment to the hair, just as it does to the skin, and frequent massaging gently stimulates the scalp and causes the blood to flow more freely.

Both men and women should be careful in the choice of a hair dressing. A good one used regularly, not only destroys dandruff germs, but keeps the hair from falling, and causes it to grow profusely and lustrous.

Parisian Sage is the hair dressing, grower and beautifier most in demand by discriminating people. So certain is its tonic action on the scalp and hair, and so sure is it to give the limit of satisfaction that the manufacturers guarantee Parisian Sage to abolish dandruff, to stop falling hair and itching scalp, or refund your money.

Parisian Sage is free from grease and stickiness and once used will never be displaced by any of the ordinary commercial hair tonics.

A large bottle costs but 50 cents at your druggists.

"I have used Parisian Sage for some time, and think it has no equal as a hair beautifier and scalp cleaner."—Mrs. William Hoglund, Sault Ste. Marie.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices, or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Mothers and Mothers.

"Mr. Drummond! Oh, dear! is one never to be free from pastoral supervision?" muttered Phillis, half sulkily, when she roused from her stupefaction and had breath to take the offensive. And what would he think of her? But that was a question to be deferred until later, when nightmares and darkness and troublesome thoughts harass the unwary soul. "Like a dog, he hunts in dreams," she might have said to herself, quoting from "Locksley Hall." But she did nothing of the kind,—only looked at the offending human being with such an outraged dignity in her bearing that Mr. Drummond nearly committed himself by bursting out laughing.

He refrained with difficulty, and said rather dryly,—

"That was a good race; but I saw you would win from the first; and you jumped that stone splendidly. I suppose you know the story of Atalanta?"

"Oh, yes," responded Phillis, gloomily; but she could not help showing of: her knowledge all the same; and she had always been so fond of heathen mythology, and had even read translations of Homer and Virgil. "She had a she-bear for a nurse, and was eventually, turned into a lion; and I always thought her very stupid for being such a baby and stopping to pick up the golden apple."

"Nevertheless, the subject is a charming one for a picture," returned Archie, with admirable readiness, for he saw Phillis was greatly hurt by this untoward accident, and he liked the girl all the better for her spirit. He would not have discovered himself at all only in another moment she must have seen him; and she would only have believed how fully he entered into the fun, and how graceful and harmless he thought it, there would have been no pang of wounded self-esteem left. But girls especially if they be worthy of the name, are so sensitive and prickly on such matters.

Dulce had basely deserted her sister, and ,at the sight of the clerical felt hat, had fled to Nan's side for protection.

"Oh, never mind," Nan had said, consoling her; "it is only Mr. Drummond. And he will know how it was, and that we thought there was not a creature in sight.' Nevertheless, she felt a little sorry in her heart that such a thing had happened. It would spoil Phillis mirth, for she was very proud; and it might shock their mother.

"Oh, he will think us such tomboys for grown-up young ladies!" sighed Dulce, who was only just grown-up.

"Never mind what he thinks," returned Nan, walking fast, for she was anxious to come to Phillis' relief. She joined them very quietly, and held out her hand to Archie as though nothing had happened.

"Is this a favorite walk of yours, Mr. Drummond? We thought we had it all to ourselves, and so the girls had a race. They will be dreadfully troubled at having a spectator; but it might be worse, for you already know us well enough not to misconstrue a little bit of fun."

"I am glad you judge me so truly," returned Archie, with a gleam of pleasure in his eyes. Phillis certainly looked uncommonly handsome, as she stood there, flushed and angry. But how sweet and cool Nan looked!—not a hair ruffled nor a fold of her dress our of order; whereas Dulce's brown locks were all loose about her shoulders, shaken down by the exercise. Nevertheless, at that moment Phillis looked the most striking.

"I am afraid my sudden appearance has put your sister out dreadfully. I assure you I would have made myself into thin air if I could," went on Archie, penitently, "but all the same it was impossible not to applaud the winner. I felt inclined to wave my hat in the air and cry, 'Bravo, Atalanta!' half a dozen times. You made such pretty running, Miss Challoner; and I wish Grace could have seen it."

The last word acted like magic on Phillis' cloudy brow. She had passed over two delicately-implied compliments with a little scorn. Did he think her, like other girls, to be mollified by sugar-plums and sweet speeches? He might keep all that for the typical young lady of Hadleigh. At Oldfield the young men knew her better.

It must be owned that the youth of that place had been slightly in awe of Phillis. One or two had even hinted that they thought her strong-minded. 'She has stand-off ways, and rather laughs at a fellow, and makes one feel sometimes like a fool," they said; which did not prove much, except that Phillis showed herself above nonsense, and had knowledge of shams, and would not be deceived, and, being the better horse of the two, showed it; and no man likes to be taken down in his class.

As Phillis would not flirt—not understanding the art, but Dulce proved herself to be a pretty apt pupil,—they left off trying to make her, and talked sensibly to her instead, which she liked better. But, though more than one had admired her, no one had ventured to persuade himself or her that he was in love; but for that there was plenty of time, Phillis not being the sort of girl to remain long without a lover.

So when she heard Grace's name she pricked up her ears, and the proud look left her face; and she said, a little archly, but in a way that that pleased Mr. Drummond,—

"All the same, I am glad your sister was not here, for she would think Dulce and me such tomboys!" using Dulce's very expression.

"Ah! you do not know Grace, and how she loves a bit of fun; only she never gets it, poor girl!" sighing in a marked manner, for he saw how interested Philis looked. "If you could only hear her laugh; but please sit down a moment and rest yourselves," continued the artful young man, who had not dared to purpose such a thing before.

Nan hesitated; but a glance at Phillis' hot face decided her.

"Just for five minutes," she said, "and then we must go back to mother;" for she had already determined that they must cut their walk short for the purpose of getting rid of Mr Drummond.

And then they sat down on the beach, and Dulce retired behind the breakwater to take off her hat and tuck up her hair; while Archie, taking no notice, leaned against the other side, and felt well contented with his position,—three such pretty girls, and all the world well away!

"Is Grace your favorite sister?" asked Phillis, suddenly, as she menanced Laddie with a small pebble.

This was a lucky opening for Archie. He was never seen to more advantage than when he was talking about Grace. There was no constraint or consciousness about him at such times, but he would speak with a simple earnestness that made people say. "What a good fellow he is!"

"Oh, she has always been that, you know," he said, brightly, "ever since she was a little thing, and I used to carry her about in my arms, and string horse-chestnuts for her, when she was the funniest, merriest little creature, and so clever. I suppose when a man has seven sisters he may be allowed to have a favorite among them? and there is not one of them to compare with Grace.'

'Seven siters!" repeated Nan, with a smile; and then she added, "you are very lucky, Mr. Drummond."

Archie shrugged his shoulders at this; he had never quite recognized his blessings in this respect. Isabel and Tottie might be tolerated, but he could easily have dispensed with Susie and, Laura and Clara; he had a knack of forgetting their existence when he was absent from them, and when he was at home he did not always care to be reminded of their presence. He was one of those men who are very exacting to their womenkind, who resent it as a personal injury if they fail in good looks or are not pleasant to the eye. He did not go so far as to say to himself that he could dispense with poor Mattie too, but he certainly acted on most occasions as though he thought so.

"Are you not fond of all your sisters? asked Phillis, rather maliciously, for she had remarked the shrug.

"Oh, as to that," replied the young man, coloring a little, "one cannot expect to be interested in a lot of school-girls. I am afraid I know very little about the four youngest, except that they are working Grace to death. Just fancy. Miss Challoner!" he continued, addressing Nan, and quite disregarding Phillis' sympathetic looks. "Grace has actually no life of her own at all; she teaches those girls, sits with them, walks with them, helps them mend clothes, just like a daily or rather a nursery governess, except that she is not paid, and has no holidays. I cannot think how mother can find it in her heart to work her so hard!" finished Archie, excited to wrath at the remembrance of Grace's wrongs.

"Well, do you know," returned Nan, thoughtfully, as he seemed to expect an answer to this, and Phillis for a wonder was silent, "I cannot think your sister an object of pity. Think what a good and useful life she is leading. She must be a perfect treasure to her mother; and I dare say they all love her dearly."

"The girls do," was the somewhat grudging response; "they follow her about like shadows, and even Isabel can do nothing without her advice. When I am at home I can scarcely get her for a moment to myself; it is 'Grace, come here,' and 'Grace, please do this for me,' until I wonder she is not worn out."

"Oh, how happy she must be!" responded Nan, softly, for to her no lot seemed sweeter than this. To be the centre and support of a large family circle,—the friend and trusted confidant of each!' What a wonderful creature this Grace must be! and how could he speak of her in that pitying tone? "No life of her own!" Well, what life could she want better than this? To be the guide and teacher of her younger sisters, and to be loved by them so dearly. "Oh, I think she is to be envied! her life must be so full of interest," she said, addressing the astonished Archie, who had certainly never taken this view of it. And when she had said this, she gave a slight signal to her sisters, which they understood at once; and then they paced slowly down the beach, with their faces towards the town, talking as they went.

The Kiss That Went Astray

By JOHN TURNLEE

The funniest case of saying goodby between a pair of lovers parting for good because they couldn't marry happened to a friend of mine. Willard Seymour. Willard met Nancy Hargrave in the sweet summer time in the country when neither had anything to do but talk about love, think about love, dream about love, and when any two young persons of opposite sex are in that situation there is bound to be a love affair between them.

Willard and Nancy spent two weeks together and would have made a match if it had not been that neither had the wherewithal to make a nest, and both realized that such was necessary. The time was long enough to cause them to wish to marry, but not long enough to cause them to do what they considered a foolish thing. Willard might have been willing to take the risk, but Nancy, who was a sensible, farseeing girl, would not hear of it.

Willard said when the parting time came that Nancy might give him just one kiss. She said she would see about it. Willard had often as a child heard his mother say when he wanted something that she would see about it, and he always got it. So when Nancy said it he felt sure that the kiss would be his.

Funny, isn't it, that fate should have produced a lot of trouble and finally forced these two to marry on account of a kiss that was not even definitely promised?

When the lovers left the summer resort, where they had passed two delicious weeks, they went from the same railway station at 10 o'clock at night. Willard was to go on one train, Nancy on another. When Willard went to the station he had not received his kiss. He arrived on a dark side of the building and saw a woman walking back and forth whom he mistook for Nancy. It occurred to him that she was waiting there in the dark to give him the farewell kiss. Going up to her, he put his arms around her.

The woman pushed him away, but any coy damsel would do that, and Willard persisted. The woman cried loudly for help. The agent came around. She accused Willard of insulting her, and there was a scene. She was very angry and insisted on the agent's telephoning for the police. He did so. They came, and on the woman's promising to appear against the prisoner he was taken to jail.

Nancy came up just in time to see her lover marched off. He was permitted to explain the matter to her, and she believed his story. She concluded to remain over and await the trial.

The next morning Willard was brought up before a judge who had acquired the name of the little red god of war from the fact that his bristling hair and whiskers were of a fiery red hue and his disposition was as fiery as his hair. It was seldom that a case of any importance came before him, and here was one of a gentleman—in appearance at least—who was accused of a heinous crime. Besides, the prisoner was a summer city man, belonging to a clan that looked down on the denizens of the town.

The woman gave her testimony, and Willard admitted the fact, but denied criminality, declaring that he had mistaken the woman for another. When he was asked what other he declined to answer on the ground that he was not required to give the other person away. Nancy was in court in a back seat. She longed to save her lover by testifying that she was the person the prisoner had intended to kiss. But to do that she must acknowledge their engagement to the world.

The trial was brief, and the prisoner was found guilty under instructions from the little red god of war that did not admit of an acquittal. Then the judge gave him a long discourse on those excrescences of society whose wealth led them to believe they could commit any crime with impunity. The prisoner was given to understand that he could not offend the morals of a town that had suffered only too often from the misdeeds of summer visitors. Since the townspeople made their living from summer boarders, this was, to say the least, unjust to the class referred to. Finally he sentenced the culprit to six months in jail.

"Your honor," cried a feminine voice from the rear of the room, "I desire to be put on the stand."

The judge declared that it was too late, but the prisoner's counsel declared that he would move for a new trial that would cost the county considerable money, and in view of this threatened expenditure the judge consented to hear what Nancy had to say. She took the stand and told the story as I have told it, or as much of it as was necessary. The judge, in order to save costs, directed the jury to retire again and bring in a new verdict. This they did, and the prisoner was acquitted.

A number of friends and acquaintances of both parties attended the trial and at the end gathered about Willard and Nancy with congratulations both as to Willard's escape from a long imprisonment and their engagement. There was nothing for them to do but to acknowledge the latter, or at least to make no denial of it, and, since they had been thus thrown together before the world by a kiss they had not enjoyed, after deliberation (including the kiss as intended) they concluded to accept the decree of fate and were accordingly, after a few months' engagement, married.

Saw Boys From 39th Battalion

It Is Possible They May be Sent to the Dardanelles

The following letter has been received by Mr. C. J. Bowell from Mr. W. E. Wheatley, organist of St. Thomas' Church, who is on a visit to England.

Leicester, Eng., July 27.

Dear Mr. Bowell:

Since we arrived in England it has rained every day. This, together with the serious illness of my mother, has prevented me getting around as much as I had hoped. However last week I journeyed to Folkestone, and after a tramp of several miles, came upon the camp of the 39th Battalion. It seemed so strange that the boys I had so recently talked to in Belleville should now be camping right upon the same ground as did Julius Caesar so many centuries ago, and within sight of the fields of France. It was a fine sight to look at these fields upon the other side of the Channel and to see the destroyers patrolling the waters. One felt how secure the Motherland was from invasion.

Colonel Preston gave me a hearty welcome and an invitation to dine with the officers. Col. Smart was indisposed, so that I did not have the pleasure of meeting him again. Capt. Spencer spoke to me of the services he conducted upon the last Sunday in Belleville, and everyone told me of the right royal send-off the citizens of Belleville gave them. Altogether I spent some four or five hours at the camp and during that time spoke to all our Belleville lads. Many send messages which I will personally deliver in a few weeks. Everyone looked well, and Captains Hudson and Allen, Lieuts. Ketcheson, Elliott and all send their best wishes.

I had hoped to visit Sandling Camp, the home of the 21st Battalion, but time would not allow. One old friend, Lieut. Fennell (Mounted Rifles) I found on my way back to Folkestone. He thinks they are likely to be moved to the Dardanelles, but of course this is not certain. I wished time would have permitted me to spend another day in the district ,as altogether 45,000 Canadians are camping in this part of the country.

I enquired again at the Midland Hospital, as another lot of wounded Canadians arrived this week, but there are none from Belleville or district.

Trusting to see you again in a few weeks, believe me,

Yours sincerely,
W. ERNEST WHEATLEY.

BUSINESS PLACES INSECURE

On their rounds of inspection last night, the police found the entrances to several places insecure.

ATTENDING ASSOCIATED BOARDS OF TRADE

Mr. John Elliott left this morning for Toronto to preside at a meeting of the Agricultural Committee of the Associated Boards of Trade and before returning will spend a few days on the Muskoka Lakes.

ROOSEVELT HOSPITAL

In Mr. Hubly's article yesterday two mistakes occurred in the figures, which were represented as millions instead of thousands. The gross expense of the hospital last year was $253,682.77, and the amount paid to the special nurses was $62,215.42.

VOLUNTARY POLICE

A young lad last night reported to the police that his bicycle had been "swiped" out of his hallway. While he was giving a detailed description of the missing wheel to the police, his comrades went out on to the street. In a few minutes they returned with cries of "Here it is! Here it is." They had seen a boy going by on a bicycle that looked familiar, and by some amateur detective work inspected it closely, then collared both the rider and wheel.

Patriotic Meeting At Thomasburg

Over 500 people gathered in the beautifully decorated grounds of the church at Thomasburg on Monday evening and blazing bonfires of white pine erected on concrete pillars like beacon fires, made the scene most romantic and picturesque. Choruses by the choirs, solos by Mrs. Dick of Roslin and Miss Anna Ponton of Belleville, accompanied by Mrs. Hill and Miss McIntyre of Toronto, a splendid recitation by little Miss Beatty, and inspiring addresses by John Elliott, H. F. Ketcheson, L. E. Allen and Col. W. N. Ponton, K.C., of Belleville, and Rev. Mr. Richards of Thomasburg, filled the evening with good and satisfying entertainment. The patriotic note that was sounded throughout met with a hearty response and no doubt many of the young men will rally to the colors as soon as harvest is over.

Over $100 was taken at the gate by the Women's Institute and over $60 at the booth. Dainty refreshments were served. Mr. Elliott as chairman introduced each speaker felicitously with current comment of his own.

Mr. Ketcheson made a rousing recruiting speech appealing directly to the boys to shoulder their responsibilities.

Mr. Allen described how the Irish question had been solved last year by Belleville intervention and spoke of the beauties of Belgium.

Rev. Mr. Richards is a new asset of the Church militant and Thomasburg is to be congratulated on the young and vigorous minister.

Colonel Ponton brought the traditions of the past to bear upon the duties of the present. New occasions teach new duties. The greatest service from those to whom most has been given in this our heritage. Canada the granary of the Empire rendered effective though the British Navy and the lusty young manhood of Canada needed at the front to fight in comradeship for hearths and homes and to crown lasting peace.

Corporal George Wilson now of Vancouver, an 1885 Veteran—one of Riel's escorts after capture—signalized his home-coming by a stirring speech and was warmly welcomed.

The townships of Hungerford and Huntingdon were well represented at this most enthusiastic gathering which is only one link in a great campaign.

DEATH ROLL

MISS H. R. ANDERSON

The death occurred yesterday evening of Miss Helen Ruth Anderson, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. M. Anderson, at the family residence, on the corner of Queen and Charles streets. Miss Anderson was very ill some years ago, having to undergo an operation. She was not confined to her bed until nine or ten days ago, and her unexpected death has caused a great grief amongst her many friends. The deepest sympathy is felt for the family in their bereavement.

Miss Anderson was a great favorite among her large circle of friends and all who were acquainted with her will be sincere mourners. She had been attending St. Agnes' School for a number of years, and, despite her delicate health made excellent progress. Miss Anderson was nineteen years and seven months old, and had resided in this locality nearly all her life. Her father, the County Attorney, her mother, three sisters, and one brother survive. The sisters are Mrs. Olive N. Ponton of Edmonton, Mrs. Violet Philpotts of Toronto, now of Edmonton, and Miss Jean of this city. The brother is Percy Anderson, who went with the first contingent and is now in England.

REFUSES GREAT FORTUNE BECAUSE OF HIS AGE

Father Graham of Philadelphia Turns Down an Estate of About $15,000,000

PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 10.—Believing his advanced age and an occasional attack of rheumatism would preclude wisely handling of great wealth Father William Graham, pastor of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, has declined to accept a fortune of from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000, left him recently through the death of relatives in Sydney, Australia, and Bolivia, South America. "I have no desire to add to my burdens a lot of wealth that would bring me no satisfaction," said Father Graham. "I am by no means rich, but I have enough wordly goods for my physical needs, and besides I am nearly 60 years old and often afflicted with rheumatism. Why should a rheumatic old man like me choose to spend the rest of his days on earth under the weight of much money? Give it to my poor relatives who need it."

Father Graham yesterday received communication from attorneys in both places asking for directions as to the management of the estate. He at once replied that he did not want the money and directed them to get into communication with the heirs next in line.

WEST HOLDS FIRST RECRUITING PLACE

In Percentage of Her Population Alberta Leads Other Provinces

OTTAWA, Aug. 10.—According to an official statement made here the Alberta military district holds first place in the percentage of her population recruited since the war broke out. Manitoba and Saskatchewan coming second, and British Columbia fourth.

Quebec with a population of 2,003,282 recruited 13,800 or 0.61 per cent.

The maritime provinces with a population of 937,955 recruited 7,400 or 0.79 per cent.

British Columbia with a population of 389,480 recruited 10,000 or 2.55 per cent.

The percentage of recruits for the whole Dominion on the basis of 105,700 men enlisted is 1.48.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

THE FORTY IMMORTALS.

Origin and Checkered Career of the French Academy.

The Institute of France had its inception in 1570, when there was founded in Paris by the French poet, Antoine de Baif, a literary and musical society, known as the Academy of the Valois. Charles IX. granted it letters patent on Nov. 20, 1570, as the Academy of Poetry and Music. It had, however, no stability. Attacked upon every occasion and criticised by its opponents, its members ceased to meet after 1584. Almost half a century passed before a revival took place.

For some time, since the year 1629, a small circle of enthusiastic students was wont to meet at each other's homes for the study of French language and literature. From year to year its membership increased, and in 1634 Cardinal Richelieu proposed to the society to have their private status changed into a public institution, with many rights and privileges. Upon agreement by the society it was henceforth known as the French Academy, with a charter from Louis XIII, of January, 1635. It consisted then of forty members, the "forty immortals," and at no time and under no pressure whatsoever has this number been increased.

True it is, also, that here royal prerogative and personal intrigue often added an inferior member, while the far superior remained excluded, for whom popular indignation created the world known "forty-first seat." For a century and a half the academy held stated meetings until Aug. 5, 1703.—Argonaut.

WOMEN PEARL DIVERS.

In Japan They Are Taught to Swim While Mere Babies.

In Japan, where pearl fishing is an important industry, nine-tenths of the pearl divers are women. Tiny girls, mere babies, are taught by their mothers to swim, and later to dive, the seashore is their playground, and at thirteen or fourteen, when they leave school, they are usually ready to begin diving in earnest. A good mother superintends her daughter's diving exercises as carefully and instructs her as faithfully as any good German hausfrau instructs her daughter in domestic tasks.

A girl does not reach her highest point of efficiency until she is about twenty-five years old. She works from eight to ten hours a day, with only two holidays a month, diving in from fifteen to forty-five feet of water. January and February are too cold for all day work, but even then she often spends from one to five hours daily on and under the water. She wears a special dress of white cotton bloomers and short skirt, her hair is twisted into a tight knot with a cloth wound through it on top of her head, and she wears goggles to protect her eyes. A small tub attached to her waist holds the oysters. She earns from fifteen cents to a dollar a day.

On this small pay she often saves a considerable amount of money, which constitutes her dowry.—Youth's Companion.

The Nearest He Ever Came to It.—"Colonel," she asked, "have you ever been up in a balloon?"

"No," he answered, "but I got to talking art to a Boston lady once, and she had me away up in the air inside of two minutes."—Exchange.

Proposes Buying American Cotton As Just Solution

Chronicle Declares Making of Raw Commodity Contraband Would Be Calamity

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The Daily Chronicle, in an editorial on the public meeting which is to be held in London to-morrow to induce the Government to declare raw cotton contraband, warns those who advocate such a measure that it will not solve the difficulties that have arisen between Great Britain and the United States or prevent cotton entering into countries like Sweden, Denmark and Holland.

"Even now," says the newspaper, "we can and do stop cotton consigned to neutral ports where there is a presumption of its hostile destination. What, then, is the advantage of making cotton contraband? It seems to us to consist in the fact that it will regulate our position in American eyes and stamp cotton cargoes with a taint of illegality from the outset.

"There is one large American interest which is adversely affected by the war, and which ought to be protected as far as we can protect it from injury. We refer to the cotton growers. It has been suggested that we ought to buy the cotton that normally would have gone to Germany and Austria.

"This is quite a manageable financial proposition, for it could not involve the expenditure of more than $150,000,000. It would be necessary to buy up the cotton that would, but for the war, go to Holland and Scandinavian countries, and then to allot to these their normal supplies. In short, we would need to buy up practically all of the American cotton exports and then stabilize prices.

"This would be a very big financial deal, but it ought not to be beyond the capacity of friendship, informed and helped by expert advice. Anyhow, we are strongly of the opinion that the British Government ought to do everything in its power to allay American irritation, so far as that irritation has a legitimate cause. It would be little short of a calamity if 25,000,000 American people who are dependent on cotton got it rooted in their minds that their interests were being sacrificed to British sea power."

GIVEN THIRTEEN YEARS

For Stealing a Horse and a Watch

NAPANEE, Aug. 11.—Hugh Carr, charged with stealing a horse from H. Lasher, appeared before Judge Madden in the County Court here yesterday, and was sentenced to ten years in the Portsmouth Penitentiary. The prisoner had a bad record, having served over twenty years in prison at different periods. There was also another charge of stealing a watch from Robert O'Neil, and for that charge he was sentenced to three years, making thirteen years. The prisoner is forty-five years of age. He took Mr. Lasher's horse out of a pasture field and had reached Hungerford, where he traded it off, and was ready to make a get-away when arrested by High Constable Van Koughnet, who will take him to the penitentiary today.

FIGHT FOR DARDANELLES AUSTRALIANS' GALLANTRY

More Important Progress Reported—Dash of Australasian Troops Makes Possible Big Extension of Anglo-French Lines

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Special—While the Russians are fighting desperately to extricate themselves from the cordon Austro-German troops which is steadily pressing them more closely in Poland, their allies are working feverishly and with considerable success to open the Dardanelles, through which they hope to pour into Russia much-needed munitions of war.

Since Saturday night, when fresh British forces were landed on the Gallipoli Peninsula there has been almost continuous fighting on the Krithia road. In these operations Australians and New Zealanders in the "Anzac" region, a name taken from the initial letters of the words "Australian-New Zealand Army Corps." have co-operated with new forces to the north. Following the successes of the troops on the Krithia road and those to the north of the "Anzac," the Australians and New Zealanders took the offensive yesterday and succeeded in trebling the area formerly held by them. Their comrades to the north, who assisted them, made no further progress, however.

BIG ACTIONS TO COME

Simultaneously the French battleship St. Louis attacked the Turkish batteries on the Asiatic side of the straits, which had been bombarding the allied positions on the peninsula, and put five guns out of commission. These actions are believed here to be preliminary to a much more ambitious attempt, which has been planned by the Anglo-French commanders to sweep the Turks before them. Very heavy losses which already have been inflicted on the Turks have had a discouraging effect upon the Ottoman troops, according to reports from Greece.

Settlement of Soldiers in Canada

Scheme Suggested is Back-to-the Land Principle

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Special—The report of the After-the-War Committee of the Royal Colonial Institute to be published shortly will unfold a scheme for the settlement of soldiers. The main feature will be the back-to-the-land principle, preferably in Canada, but with the option of the other Colonies or in Great Britain.

The question who will provide the money is the chief problem for the committee. The committee wants the Imperial, and overseas Governments to provide not merely the land and transportation, but sufficient money to tide the soldier settlers over the non-productive period.

An emigration agent who has just completed a tour of Scotland reports a marked revival of interest in Canada. Many enquiries were received from young crofters regarding prospects in the Dominion after the war.

Confirmation of Peace Overtures

PETROGRAD, Aug. 11.—The Novo Vremya confirms the rumors of German overtures for separate peace. It is alleged that Germany offered Russia Galicia and the Dardanelles, with a guarantee of the integrity of her frontiers, Germany stipulating for Egypt on the pretext of ceding the same to Turkey and for a free hand to deal with Russia's allies.

"This attempt testifies," says the journal, "that in spite of her brilliantly organized espionage Germany entirely fails to discount the sentiment of the Russian authorities and of the whole Russian people."

Good Work By British Navy

Breslau and Goeben Both Sunk in the Black Sea

LONDON, Aug. 12.—An Athens despatch to The London Daily News says British submarines have entered the Black Sea and torpedoed the Turkish cruiser which formerly was the Breslau, one transport and one gunboat.

The Daily Telegraph Athens correspondent wires under date of Wednesday:—The Goeben has been torpedoed. She was run aground in a narrow creek in the Bosphorus, where she is lying alongside the shore in default of a dry or floating dock in Turkey sufficiently large to accommodate a vessel of her size. A dyke has been built around her, from which the Turks are engaged in pumping out the water.

The Breslau is a protected cruiser, and the Goeben a battleship cruiser. Both belonged to Germany and are modern vessels. They took refuge in the Dardanelles when chased by British ships. Later they were included in the Turkish navy and renamed. They fired the first shots in the raid on Russian Black Sea ports that marked Turkey's entrance into the war. Since then they have both been reported damaged, and as having lost much of their former efficiency. Athens despatches in regard to the exploits of British submarines have usually been correct. To get to the Black Sea British submarines would have to go through the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus.

Cochrane's New Dignity Gave Zest to Holiday

Northern Railway Centre Attracted Large Crowds From Miles Around

COCHRANE, Aug. 11.—(Special)—Duly impressed with the importance of its recently acquired role of headquarters of the Transcontinental Railway, Cochrane set itself the task today of showing visitors from neighboring towns what an important railway centre can do in the way of big things. It was civic holiday and the occasion attracted large crowds from miles around. In fact, it can be written down as the largest and most successful event of any description in the history of the town.

Special trains on the T. & N. O. Railway from points south, and the regular train from the west on the Transcontinental Railway brought in large crowds, the visitors including a party of soldiers from the internment camp at Kapuskasing. Among the visitors was A. J. Eckardt of Toronto. He was to have been accompanied by a number of other Toronto citizens, but at the last minute they were prevented from leaving. Mr. Eckardt is a great believer in the future of Cochrane and has invested largely in the town and district.

In discussing the prospects of the town Mr. Eckardt said to The World that he considered Cochrane today is 100 per cent. better off than was Winnipeg in 1887.

The town was gaily decorated for the holiday and the weather throughout the day was ideal. The committee having charge of the arrangements had provided a programme of sports which lasted from 10 a.m. until dark.

Early Closing of Kingston Bars

Measure Aimed at the Soldiers is Likely to Lead to "Blind Pigs"

KINGSTON, Aug. 11.—The benefit derived from closing the bars at seven o'clock were not very apparent on Monday night. As the new law is admittedly aimed at the soldiers they take it as an insult rather than an inconvenience.

Some people are of the opinion that Kingston will be similar to Niagara if the present regulation is not changed. At Niagara, a soldier in uniform cannot be served with liquor at any time. As result of this move on the part of the License Commission, a number of blind pigs" are selling liquor to the soldiers. The effects are said to be worse than before the new law was put into force.

STARTLING REVELATION

OTTAWA, Aug. 11.—Among the twenty-nine Germans and Austrians whose applications for naturalization papers in Ottawa are now awaiting judicial consideration are two Germans who have described themselves under the heading of "occupation" as being members of the Canadian Ordnance Corps. Why Germans who have not yet taken out naturalization papers should be employed in handling Canada's guns and ammunition is a question both for the court and the Militia Department to consider. It may be noted that there are still in the Government employ in various Departments of State a number of German-born citizens whose sympathies in the war are, to say the least, not decidedly pro-British.

TOOK POISON IN ERROR

NEW YORK, August 11.—Vanderhyden Fyles, 38 years old, a dramatic critic and writer, died to-day of bi-chloride poisoning in a private sanitarium. Mr. Fyles was under the care of John F. Moore, who said the deceased had taken the poison by mistake. Mr. Fyles, he said, had been suffering from severe pains in the ears and he had directed him to use the poison externally in hope of gaining relief.

On Monday morning, according to the physician, Mr. Fyles suffered severe pains and took the bi-chloride tablets, believing them to be headache tablets. This morning he suffered severe pains and when he realized the mistake he had made summoned the physician.

Mr. Fyles contributed articles about the theatre to a number of newspapers outside New York as well as to a number of magazines. He was the son of the late Franklyn Fyles, a dramatic critic.

GERMANY TO AID TURKEY AIMS TO CRUSH SERBIA

Massing 300,000 Troops in Bosnia and Herzegovina to March Against Serbia and Open Way to Salonica

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A Morning Post Despatch from Salonika via Switzerland states that the Germans have massed three hundred thousand men in Bosnia and Herzegovina and will soon march against Serbia to crush the Serbians and open a way across Greece to Salonika and relieve Turkey. This project excites no surprise here, having been predicted by Italian military critics several weeks ago.

In the Berlin Tages Zeitung Count Reventlow declares that Germany must cut her way through to Constantinople and thus make the new Triple Alliance a reality.

The morning papers comment on the obstinacy of the Balkan States in allowing their local jealousies to distract their attention from the common danger.

THE WIND JAMMERS

Now Only Twenty-Eight on Lake Ontario

OSWEGO, N. Y., Aug. 11.—The day of the old wind jammer on the lake is past. There are now 28 schooners in commission on Lake Ontario, where formerly there were several hundred, and they are nearly all Canadian owned, though nearly all once had an American register. As the old schooners and sail crafts pass away their type is not reproduced, but instead, small steamers that have found it impossible to do business any longer at a profit in competition with the 600-footers, are coming to Lake Ontario and are being used in the coal-carrying trade, going into harbors, where the water is not too shallow, and even then they can be brought in with a partial cargo which will require less water than they usually draw. With a few exceptions all are owned by Canadian coal dealers and companies.

SIR DAVID BEATTY NOW VICE-ADMIRAL

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The Official Gazette announces today that Sir David Beatty has been promoted to be a Vice-Admiral.

Sir David Beatty during the present war commanded the British fleet which in August, 1914, sank four German warships off Heligoland, and won a victory over a German squadron in the North Sea the following January. In this latter fight the German cruiser Bluecher was sent to the bottom.

Vice-Admiral Beatty is only 45 years old, and the youngest officer ever promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral in the British Navy.

It is rumored that Admiral Beatty commanded the warships bringing to Halifax the great shipment of gold which was consigned for New York.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST "THE CHANT OF HATE"

BERLIN, Aug. 11.—A campaign against Ernest Lissauer's song expressing hatred for England has been started by the Cologne Volks Zeitung, a Catholic organ, which demands the exclusion of the song from books intended for the young. The paper declares it would be a portentous condition if at a time of international bitterness even the youth of a nation were taught to cherish hatred.

The Berliner Tageblatt and other influential newspapers have endorsed the demand voiced by the Volks Zeitung.

PAID WARM TRIBUTE TO SIR JAMES AIKINS

Hon. Mr. Rogers, who is at present in Toronto en route to Ottawa after spending his holidays at his Summer home in Kenora, stated that the Conservative party in Manitoba is not at all disheartened by the recent defeat in the elections. Speaking of the rumor that Sir James Aikins may be selected as the next Lieutenant-Governor for Manitoba. Hon. Mr. Rogers said: "Such a thing as the appointment of Sir James has never been discussed, but there is no position in the gift of the Government that he could not fill with credit to the country and himself."

Grand Trunk Men Subscribe Fund For Machine Gun

Employes of Car Department at Point St. Charles, Will Also Provide Crew

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—The employes in the Car Department of the Grand Trunk shops at Point St. Charles yesterday decided to present a machine gun for the use of the Canadian Expeditionary Force. An enthusiastic meeting of workers was held in that branch of the big shops yesterday afternoon to discuss plans for assisting the Montreal battalions about to sail for Europe. The men unanimously expressed their determination to subscribe towards the cost of a machine gun, and it is believed that the car shop employes will supply even more than one gun. Men from the Point St. Charles shops will also offer their services to go with the guns. Similar patriotic action is being taken at other Grand Trunk centres.

Nearly fifteen hundred empoyes of the Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways are now serving with the Canadian forces. Mr. E. J. Chamberlain, president, and general officers of the company have enthusiastically supported the recruiting movement, and the company has made special provision for those of its workers who have volunteered for active service.

Stole Money to Go to England

Attendant Shaw May be Released If He Will Enlist

KINGSTON, Aug. 11.—An effort is being made by the friends of Frederick Shaw, a former attendant at the Rockwood Hospital who was committed to stand his trial on the charge of theft, to have him released on suspended sentence, on condition that he enlist for war service.

Shaw, who it appears comes from a very good family in the Old Country, is very anxious to go over to England and enlist in the British army. His wife and children are there at the present time.

The men from whom he took the money are very anxious that his request be granted. His mis-step was due to his desire to get home and see his wife who is very ill. The pay at Rockwood Hospital was too small for him to save enough to pay his passage, and for that reason when the attendants asked him to cash his check the man saw his chance to get some "easy" money and he yielded to temptation.

One of the men from whom he took the money stated that if he had known that Shaw wanted the money to pay his passage, he would gladly have lent it to him.

Justice of Peace George Hunter, who committed Shaw to stand his trial has taken the matter before the County Attorney, who it appears is very favorable to allowing the accused his liberty on suspended sentence on condition that he joins the army.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Commenting on the presentation of the freedom of the City of Bristol to Premier Borden, the Bristol Times and Mirror expresses the city's pride in the centuries-old historic associations with the North Amercian continent, and the close connection in modern times with the Dominion. Orange Picnic At Huffmans's Island

Messrs. F. E. O'Flynn and A. R. Walker were the guests of the Orangemen of the Hay Bay District yesterday on the occasion of their annual picnic at Huffman's Island on the north shore of Hay Bay. The day was an ideal one and the sloping shore of this historic spot presented a beautiful picture. The ladies in their white dresses made an impression which will not soon be forgotten. The sturdy yeomen in holiday attire were enjoying themselves. The party which numbered some hundreds took dinner on the shore under the shade of the wide spreading beeches. The pretty motor boats ran backwards and forwards on the surface of the bay. The sky was cloudless and the bright sun and surrounding landscapes would remind one of the Italian climate.

The sports consisted of a game of baseball and although the ground was not all to be desired the splendid playing made up for this lack. At 2.30 p.m. the guests assembled on the shore and the programme was opened by Mr. Richardson, the County Master, who then called upon Mr. A. R. Walker, who gave an interesting address on the history and principles of the Order. Mr. O'Flynn, who was the speaker of the day, was then called upon and spoke for an hour, dealing with the questions of the present. The demands of our country, the claim of the British Empire, and the duty of the young men of Canada. Interesting incidents were narrated and the present conditions of affairs reviewed. Great interest was manifested in the address and the speaker was applauded from time to time during his address and received an ovation at its close. The address was really a recruiting speech. The Rev. Mr. Boyce then closed the programme with a short adress. A splendid booth was on the ground, where ice cream and refreshments were served. The young ladies were busy selling tags for the erection of a new Orange Hall and as the people began to disperse and wend their way homeward in the late afternoon, it was voted as one of the most successful picnics that they had ever held.

A UNIVERSAL FOOD

Following Nature's Footsteps

"I have a boy, two years old, weighing forty pounds and in perfect health who has been raised on Grape-Nuts and milk.

"This is an ideal food and evidently furnishes the elements necessary for a baby as well as for adults. We have used Grape-Nuts in large quantities and greatly to our advantage."

One advantage about Grape-Nuts food is that it is partially pre-digested in the process of manufacture. The starch contained in the wheat and barley is transformed into a form of sugar by the same method as this process is carried out in the human body; that is, by the use of moisture and long baking exposure to moderate warmth, which grows the diastase in the grains and with long baking makes the remarkable change from starch to sugar.

Therefore, the most delicate stomach can handle Grape-Nuts and the food is quickly absorbed into the blood and tissue, certain parts of it going directly to building and nourishing both body and brain. "There's a Reason."

Ontario Farmers Require Help

"Help!" is the loud cry from the Ontario farmers. It is contained in a large number of letters received during the past few days at the colonization department at the parliament buildings.

J. Macdonald, director of the department, said yesterday afternoon that able-bodied men suitable for farm work had only to make known their readiness to go to the farms to get all the work they could do until the winter. The farmers are at their wits' end for adequate help just now, owing to the enormous amount of extra labor entailed by the effects of the recent disastrous stormy weather.

How the British Flung Foe From Hooge Trenches

Terrible Havoc Wrought by the Artillery Before Infantry Got Word

LONDON, August 11.—The Daily Chronicle's correspondent at British headquarters in Flanders telegraphs under date of Monday:

"The trenches at Hooge, captured by the enemy on July 30th were retaken this morning with additional ground, amounting in all to a length of 1,200 yards. The loss of our trenches was an unfortunate episode but it was confidently expected that the position would be recovered without great difficulty. That expectation kept us on tenter hooks several days, and last night, when at some distance from Hooge, there was a sound of heavy gunfire. There were many men in many billets who listened silently, with a sudden indrawing of breath because they knew the work was beginning.

"On one little spot in Flanders there was a group of people staring up into the sky. Around them for miles was a great panorama of the war zone, with Ypres as a centre, and into the darkness leaped sharp swords of light and bursting stars, which left reddish clouds above the black woods and the fields. Such a bombardment, in a night of infernal beauty and terror, was not the direct attack on the German position on Hooge, but the French artillery on our left bombarding the enemy. The main attack for the recovery of our lost ground began with a preliminary bombardment shortly after dawn, answered by the enemy to the east, west and north of Ypres salient. For many miles and over a wide territory there was the bursting of great shells and storm clouds of shrapnel.

At four o'clock our fire was concentrated upon the lines of Hooge, and from all our batteries at long and short range there were flung forth a torrent of fire. When the foes were frightened the order was given to the infantry to take the trenches. The condition of the enemy's lines must have been terrible beyond words, and their death roll was very heavy in those destroyed dugouts and behind the broken parapets.

"Our own casualties are so far reported as slight for the artillery had done most of the work and overcome the enemy's response.

"The prisoners who were taken—about 150 in all—up to the time of writing, were in a dazed and demoralized condition.

"The enemy has not yet prepared a counter-attack and our men are consolidating their positions after a victory which cannot yet be told in detail."

INVENTS FIRE BOMB TO FIGHT POISONOUS GAS

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Sir Hiram Maxim, who has been engaged for some time in developing a means of combating the poison gas used by the Germans, has designed a very simple apparatus which the Government is now testing. The object of the apparatus is to cause large and rapidly spreading fires by means of specially designed incendiary bombs in the path of the advancing gas at a distance of several hundred yards from the British trenches.

By this means, since the heating of the air must cause an upward rush, the gas is driven up out of harm's way.

Sir Hiram to-day explained the invention as follows:

"Chlorine gas at one atmosphere of pressure is twice and a half as heavy as air. In escaping into the air it very quickly becomes mixed with a large quantity of air, so that by the time it reaches the trenches it is extremely light compared with the air, but quite strong enough to prove fatal.

"It occurred to me some months ago that if fire could be produced between the gas and our trenches, the rapid upward movement of the air would take the chlorine along with it.

"A firm London which proposes to make anti-gas bombs has designed a machine for throwing them with great accuracy a distance of 300 yards. By this means fire of any size may be produced, and if the fire is large enough the gases must be dissipated."

Milk sterilized by electricity will keep sweet in capped bottles for eight days.

The Army Service Corps will look after the supplies on the march, part of the transport section accompanying the cavalry. The regiment will number 225 officers, non-coms., and mounted men.

Lt.-Col. Munro and his men are looking forward to this trek with much pleasure, and outside of the exercise for men and horses, the trip is expected to influence recruiting greatly from the points between the camp and Belleville. The people of Napanee and Belleville will have a chance to see what a good mounted regiment looks like when they see the 8th C.M.R.

MARMORA DEBENTURES SELL ABOVE PAR

The village has been successful in disposing of their debentures for fire protection. They will bring a fraction over par, which is an exceptionally good sale, considering the present condition of the money market. This will enable the council to proceed at once with the proposed scheme for fire protection, and in future, losses as a result of fire should be very small.

POTATOES FOR WAR FUND.

Product of Rural Ontario School Children Is Being Sold.

One hundred thousand bushels of potatoes, grown by rural school children of Ontario, are to be sold to increase the war fund, says The Canadian Counryman.

That is the advertisement that will be displayed to Toronto consumers this fall. Perhaps there will be far more than the specified number of bushels. One hundred thousand is a conservative estimate. But what there are the children will have grown for no reward but the inward sense of approval which comes from unselfish giving.

And thereby hangs a tale.

In every school in the Province taking part in school fair work an offer will be made to the children that, judging by their past record, will be accepted eagerly. A quantity of seed potatoes will be given each one desiring it, sufficient to plant a plot two rods by one in dimensions. Prizes will be awarded upon care of plot, quality and quantity of crop, as in other classes upon the prize list.

In the fall the potatoes from each township will be taken to central points in the various counties, and will be shipped to Toronto. There the crop will be advertised as War Fund Potatoes, and will be sold as such. The proceeds will be turned over by the Department of Agriculture to aid the soldiers.

Last year over 20,000 pupils of rural fairs grew crops or made collections of various kinds under the direction of the district representatives. The number will be greatly increased this year. From these figures an idea of the extent of the work may be gained, and the quantity of potatoes to be produced may be calculated.

But the greatest benefit to be derived from this patriotic feature of production will not come from the money secured from the sale of potatoes. That will help, and if Kitchener be not wrong in his analysis of the war situation, will be needed.

But the greatest good will come to the children themselves. To labor in a great and good cause, to give unselfishly for the public weal—these are the principles which must be taught, and practical experience is the best teacher. Such work will tend to develop traits of character that are the foundation upon which true co-operation rests, and which lead to improved social and economic conditions.

"It will mean more to the right sort of child to produce something for the sake of Empire than to win a money prize. It is a step in the right direction.

It was sentence day in the city court. A man in the prisoners' pen who had been sentenced to two years for larceny began to cry softly. The big man next to him, who was going to serve seven years for bigamy, said:

"I'm—I'm—th-th-thinkin' about leaving' [sob] my—my—family—leavin' my wife"—

Knights Templar 32nd Convention

Some 250 Delegates Arrive to Attend Sessions Today and Tomorrow

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—Members of the Sovereign Grand Priory of Canada, Masonic Knights Templar, to the number of about 250 arrived in the city yesterday to attend the thirty-second annual convention of the order, which opened last evening at the Windsor Hotel. Accompanying them were a number of ladies who will participate in the programme of entertainment which has been arranged for the delegates.

The meeting last evening was taken up with purely routine matters preparatory to the regular sessions tomorrow and Thursday. The chief interest centers on the session on Thursday morning, when officers will be elected. It is generally expected that the present Supreme Grand Master, M. E. Sir Kt. Philip D. Gordon, of Westmount, will be succeeded by Deputy Grand Master A. W. Chapman, of Winnipeg, and that city will be chosen for the next annual convention.

Trips to the Mountain and to Lachine, and a reception with music at the hotel in the evening, are among the special features of the programme for today. Tomorrow the delegates and their lady friends will make a trip around the harbor at the conclusion of the business session.

Editors Please Note.

Any metropolitan journal having a vacancy on its staff for a dramatic reviewer of original style and with a nice choice in adjectives and adverbs, cannot do better than look up the author of a notice of a concert given by a Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, which was sent in to a Toronto editor recently, says Toronto Saturday Night. The following extract will serve as a taste of the quality of this new aspirant for the mantle of Hazlitt and William Winter:

"The entertainment consisted of a piano solo and a vocal solo, then two dramatical displays, 'A Lark at the Hall' and 'Britannia and Her Stewards.' The plot or underlying thought in each case was not at all labyrinthic. It was facilely arrived at, and may be summed up thus—that in each case the harmful, injurious, detrimental, and baneful constituencies of alcohol were conspicuously shown. Apart from all this, there was ample amusement enjoyed without any sardonic laughter. One could readily see that some arduous labor had been spent by the actors and actresses, as they were very propitious and at their ease. Certainly they were worthy of the highest encomiums. 'Last but least is no jest, for Miss Bilkins scored equal with the best 'in the closing item, a patriotic recitation which was very congruous at the present day."

Belgium Thanks Canada.

Canada's contribution toward the relief of the destitute non-combatants of Belgium exceeds to date $2,000,000. The exact value of the Canadian contributions is placed at $2,071,082.63.

It may surprise a great many people to know that in proportion to wealth and population Canada's contributions have been much more generous than those of the United States.

A recent report gives a list of the cargoes of supplies sent by the Canadians, one of them worth $462,000 and another $450,000. There is also included in the statement a letter from the King and Queen of Belginm extending the thanks of Belgium for the "generous spirit" of the people of Canada.

AFTER THE WAR.

Although the progress of the war is satisfactory, it must be admitted that, had we devoted more time to preparing for it beforehand, we should have done far better. This lesson should be laid to heart, and we should now prepare for putting the affairs of the Empire in order for after the war, and the longer we can devote to it the better it can be done. The one great outstanding need is the better distribution of the Empire's population.

The fact that Canada a century ago was worth nothing, but is now worth untold millions is due to migration, mainly from Great Britain. Had the flow of immigration been double, Canada's prosperity, acreage under crops, wealth, exports and manufactures would all have increased in proportion. She could have exported more food to Great Britain and her allies, and her contingents of troops at the front could have been doubled. The patriotism and generosity of the Canadians have astonished the world, and these should survive after the war. It will be WORK and NOT GIFTS which the people at home will need. A great pressure of unemployment is to be expected in Great Britain on the conclusion of peace, and the provision of work will be need for defence against starvation, poverty and physical deterioration. Then the best and most enduring way for Canada to aid the British distress which otherwise will be inevitable will be to take some of Great Britain's surplus labour to work on her vacant acres, so that both may be employed to the fullest advantage. By this means she can increase Britain's food supplies and keep down her poor rate, and at the same time provide for her own defence by the introduction of efficiently trained troops, and reduce the burden of Britain's war taxation by increasing the number of shoulders to bear it.

The only way to avoid a war in the Pacific is by being prepared to defend the Empire's empty areas of productive soil in Western Canada and elsewhere. The Canadians are fighting nobly and showing themselves worthy of their British stock, but can Canada be said to be ready for aggression, especially in the West, before her population is doubled? Had this happened before, the Hon. W. J. Roche, in his last New Year's message could have cabled home, the "vast resources of Western Canada will furnish annually 400,000,000 bushels of wheat for the Motherland." As it was he could only mention half that quantity.

The first duty of the Government of the Dominion of Canada is obviously to provide work for all of their own forces who return to civil life, but surely they can arrange that all vacancies by death in their Expeditionary Forces are filled on the return journey by fit men who wish to migrate from Lord Kitchener's army, which is to be discharged as soon as possible after the war. This would provide labour for the land, and their consuming capacity would increase employment in the towns. They would willingly undertake to repay their fares out of wages after arrival, but cannot save anything out of their shilling a day pay, half of which in innumerable cases is assigned to their relatives, so as to qualify them for a Government subsidy. Canada was one of the prizes the Prussians coveted. Are her saviours to be excluded because they were born at home?

The Imperialism of the boys is unparalleled. All the best who could go, at the age of sixteen and upwards, have enlisted by overstating their ages, and cases of boys joining the ranks at the age of fifteen are frequent. None of these wish to return to their former occupations and narrow lives. When, therefore, there are situations for which no local labour is applying, will not fares be advanced to help out such boys from home? Thousands of those who came out in the past have enlisted and proved the sterling worth of their class.

The one thing needful for Canada to become a truly great nation is to double or treble her population. Now is her great opportunity to do so, and at the same time to prove that the Empire is indissolubly one, not only in arms but in labour also, and the opportunity will, we hope, never recur, as it is due to the war. The extension of Canada's urban employment also depends on the expansion of her rural population. It has been suggested that if one in every two Canadian farmers holding ten acres and over of land would take an ex-soldier boy during the two years after the war is over, some three hundred and fifteen thousand could come out, and after they had repaid their fares they could assist in the migration of their own and other boys' sisters, and thus secure the destiny of the Dominion. They would also spend $40 a year on clothing alone, which would amount to about twelve and a half million dollars a year.

Is the Empire to be one in peace as well as in war? What is Canada's reply? Those Canadians who cannot join the active forces at the front could now get ready to help to receive the would-be settlers of our troops so that the words of Sir Robert Borden, uttered in the House of Commons at Ottawa on April 10 may apply to the Canadians' answer to the clarion of peace as it did to the tocsin of war. Sir Robert said: "No one of us doubted then when the end came the people of Canada would be ready to respond to the call; but we rejoice that in every Province, and indeed in every community in Canada, the response has been so warm, so loyal, so splendidly patriotic, that every one of us feels today more proud than ever he did before of this great Dominion."

Germany's peace offers are, in reality, war measures, since they are intended to weaken the enemy. They are military necessities.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES

Public opinion abroad calculated with silent satisfaction on the day when the suspension of the blockade and the adoption of the Declaration of London will cause Germany to abandon her submarine war against the enemy's commerce. We think that these persons will find themselves very much mistaken.

Since we adopted this most satisfactory mode of attack and defence many things have happened, and all that has occurred has but the more tended to strenghten our opinion that no statesman worthy of the name can for a moment entertain the idea of abandoning the one and only means that appears to offer a chance, where so many other means failed, of bringing England to her knees.

From the trade point of view, to fling away such a weapon for a good word from the United States would be idiocy—nay, more it would be suicidal. —The "Deutsche Tageszeitung"

"GOTT STRAFE ENGLAND."

A German poem, "God Punish England," companion to the Hymn of Hate:—

This is the German greeting
When men their fellows meet,
The merchants in the market place,
The beggars in the street.
A pledge of bitter enmity
Thus runs the winged word:
"God punish England, brother!—
Yea! Punish her, O Lord!"

With raucous voice, brass-throated,
Our German shells shall bear
This curse that is our greeting
To the "cousin" in his lair.
This be our German battle-cry,
This motto on our sword:
"God punish England, brother!—
Yea! Punish her, O Lord!"

By shell from sea, by bomb from air,
Our greeting shall be sped,
Making each English homestead
A mansion of the dead.
And even Grey will tremble
As falls each iron word:
"God punish England, brother!—
Yea! Punish her, O Lord!"

This is the German greeting
When men their fellows meet,
The merchants in the market place,
The beggars in the street,
A pledge of bitter enmity
Thus runs the winged word:
"God punish England, brother!—
Yea! Punish her, O Lord!"

Bulgaria Names Her Conditions

Demands That Serbia Shall Cede Macedonia to Her

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Aug. 10.—Bulgaria will send her armies marching against Constantinople in 24 hours if Serbia will cede Macedonia to her.

V. Radoslaveff, Prime Minister of Bulgaria, and the man who more than any other to-day holds the destinies of Europe in his hand, made this frank statement today.

In an interview granted the United Press, the Bulgarian Premier for the first time revealed to the world exactly what Bulgaria demands for remaining neutral and what she asks the Allies for driving the Turk from Europe, an operation that admittedly would prove the turning point of the war for the Allies. Of equal importance was the denial of the report circulated in European capitals that Bulgaria, having won Constantinople, would demand the Ottoman capital as her prize.

SERBIA TO MAKE CONCESSIONS.

London, Aug. 11.—If the statement made by a Nish correspondent is reliable, there is a strong probability that a Balkan agreement will be reached by which Bulgaria will march against Turkey. The Nish despatch announced that Serbia is willing to make important concessions to Bulgaria.

It was announced that Serbia is willing to make these concessions, the exact nature of which was not stated, provided the Allies secure assurance from the other Balkan states that they will negotiate in a conciliatory spirit.

An Athens despatch today declared Greece had asked for eight days in which to consider the proposal of the Allies that she cede Kavalia to Bulgaria; receiving Smyrna in compensation at the end of the war. The Greek Government is said to have asked the Serbian Foreign Office today whether Serbia is willing to negotiate on the basis suggested by the Allies. The Serbian Foreign Office replied in the affirmative.

COMMUNICATION TO BULGARIA

Paris, Aug. 11.—The correspondent at Salonika of the Havas Agency telegraphs that diplomatic representatives of France, Russia, Great Britain and Italy have delivered a joint communication to the Bulgarian Government with a view to procuring the collaboration of that nation with the Allies, as part of a common understanding with the Balkan States.

This action was taken in conjunction with the presentation of similar communications to Greece and Servia as recently made known. It is in response to Bulgaria's request on June 14 for information from the Quadruple Entente Powers concerning the advantages she might expect in exchange for her active co-operation with them

TIMES NOT VERY HARD.

At Least City Pawnbrokers Do Not Report Great Activity.

If one were to judge by the experience of the pawnbrokers of Toronto—and much, nay all, of their calling is concerned with life's seamy side—it would almost seem as though the hard times, of which we have heard so much within the last twelve months, cannot have been so very hard after all, says a writer in the Toronto Star Weekly. For enquiry at some of the local pawnshops elicits the fact that these are not very overstocked, as one would expect would likely to be the case in a time when there has been more unemployment and more trade depression than have been known for some years.

"There has been a little more pawning than usual within the last year or so," said one pawnbroker, "but at no time has there been anything like what might be called a rush to the pawnshops. In fact, the increase in pawning has been far from large. It has not been sufficient to send down pawnable values, though it has probably resulted in pawnbrokers refusing to take in pledge some of the more rubbishy articles which are brought to them."

At the same time, the lean season through which we are passing has been responsible for some people entering the pawnshop, who probably, not so very long ago, never dreamed that it would be their lot to darken its doors. The real estate man, the lawyer whose practice was concerned largely with the transfer of real estate, the stockbroker — each of these is represented on the pawnbroker's books to-day.

As a matter of fact, however, the fine art of pawning is one which has never been very assiduously practiced in Toronto. There is at any rate nothing to compare in volume with the pawning which goes on in most large cities of Great Britain or of the United States. And this is the case even in winter time when, with so many perforce out of work by reason of climatic conditions, one would certainly expect that the portable property of many a home would find its way to 'Uncle."

Toronto pawners are of two wholly distinct types—far asunder as are the poles. There is a fairly prevalent idea that the person who "hocks" his personal property must necessarily be idle, extravagant, or dissolute. And certainly there is one type of pawner who is one of the three if not all three combined: That class of pawner is often of the weekly kind which pledges articles on a Monday and redeems them when the pay envelope is received at the end of the week. Every pawnbroker has his regular customers of this kind.

On these hardened pawners, whom drink, debt, and difficulty have long marked for their own, one need not, perhaps, waste much pity. But there is another type of pawner wholly different from the thriftless and shiftless type. Many a man occupying an outwardly good position in Toronto finds himself compelled to seek the pawnbrokers' aid to tide over certain emergencies. Even the most seemingly prosperous of business careers may have its financial crisis, unknown to, and even unsuspected by, the outside world. But the pawnbroker "could a tale unfold." Thank heaven, he has learnt secrecy and silence from his youth up.

Dr. Harry Bertram Anderson, of Toronto, whose election as president of the Ontario Medical Association took place very appropriately in his native county, Peterborough, has already established a high reputation in his profession. Always an omnivorous reader, his theoretical knowledge has been amplified from time to time by periods of practical work in England, and on the Continent, that gives additional value to his frequent contributions to current medical literature. In addition to the demands of his practice, and the time devoted to writing, what might be described as his leisure hours, have enabled him to serve on the staff of various Toronto medical institutions and also to discharge the duties imposed by his appointment as a member of the Medical Faculty of the University of Toronto. Dr. Anderson has already had considerable executive experience as president of several medical societies, including the Academy of Medicine, Toronto, and has shown a gift for organization and the ability to interest in these associations some of the most distinguished members of the profession.

LACROSSE AT THE FRONT.

Writer Describes Amusements of Men in France

"Too contemptuous to grace with the dignity of a denial," is how a high Canadian officer characterizes the statement issued by Wolff's German Press Bureau, that among the papers of Brigadier-General Turner, which were alleged to have fallen into German hands at Ypres, was an order signed by Lieut.-Adjutant Col. Taylor, of the Fourth Division, to the effect that many men of that division had surrendered to the enemy, and giving orders that officers of other units were to shoot every man who attempted to surrender, and to direct artillery fire to the spot if the movement is a large one.

The British return [illegible] a free translation of this German libel on Canadian troops, reached the little hamlets behind Bethune where the division is now resting to-day.

From an officer who was close to the Fourth Brigade at the Ypres fight, I gather that the largest body of men who surrendered, numbered thirty odd, and of these a score were badly wounded and isolated from their own field dressing stations.

They were deceived into surrendering by a group of about two hundred of what seemed to be other Canadian troops, who called to them that they were the Third Brigade come up to support. In reality they were Germans dressed in khaki.

Some Canadian Highlanders captured a wood in which there were about a hundred of these men, and they did not take a single prisoner.

Where the Canadian division is now resting is out of range of stray shells, though it is not out of the bound of the continuous artillery duel, which is going on round La Bassee. Now and again they can see the big calibre shells bursting over Bethune. Sometimes there is an interesting air duel to watch, as happened on Monday, almost over our billets, in which the British aviator brought down one fast German aviator.

It is broiling hot summer now with the heat rivalling the prairie weather. The men are allowed the luxury of doing their daily tasks without tunics, and sunhaps have been served out for caps.

Over near a wood is a practice ground, where, day after day, squads of grenade-throwers are practicing, keeping up a continual bombardment against dummy German figures in a dummy trench. Southward bordering the road that runs to St. Pol, a field has been found for baseball. Foul lines are marked out, a real rubber diamond has miraculously appeared, and bases are strapped down in regulation fashion. A seven-team league, with fanciful names, has been started, and a regular schedule been drawn up to last the two weeks which have been promised the division for resting.

French soldiers who come up from camps to the south are interested spectators. Lacrosse is often played in the evenings, and all games are encouraged by the Brigade Commanders, for they are the best possible cure for the slightly unnerved men who went through the terrific fighting around Festubert, [illegible] than Langemarck.

"The Germans," he said, "had piled their weeks-old dead into barricades along the communication trenches which we captured, and the shells would burst on the heaps, spraying our men with human remains, sometimes in such ghastly quantity that nature revolted and the men just had to be sick.

"The parapets, behind which the Germans fought for two days, were made of bodies, bound together with barbed wire, and when we gained them there was no chance of burying them, for the floor of the trench was of the same material, with an inch or two of earth packed down, and here and there an arm or leg, perhaps a face, was gruesomely exposed."

Larder Beetles.

Larder beetles are widely distributed in Canada and in Europe. They belong to the same family as the notorious Buffalo carpet beetle. While housekeepers frequently recognise the adult beetle they seldom connect up the brown hairy grubs with them. These grubs not only attack food products, but feed upon skins, feathers, hairs, and furs. The adult beetles deposit their eggs in cracks and crevices about the pantry. They burrow into the hams, but confine themselves to the outside; when about to transform to pupae they make further burrows into the meat. Under favourable conditions the insect develops quite rapidly, and there may be several generations during a season. The adults can be readily attracted and caught by exposing pieces of cheese of which they are very fond. If this cheese is ground up and poisoned with arsenic the beetles will easily be poisoned, and if this is followed up carefully for several days it may prove effectual. If, however, the beetles continue very abundant the room should be entirely cleared of food and given a thorough cleaning, and finally sprayed with benzine. If a ham or piece of meat should become infested with grubs the part containing them should be cut away and destroyed by burning or otherwise, and the remaining part of the meat treated with a dilute solution of carbolic acid.

Pro-German Pianist Discharged.

Miss Odelia Lauer, a German-American pianist, with an American concert company, which appeared at the City Auditorium in London, Ont., some weeks ago, has been discharged for her refusal to play "God Save the King" when requested to do so at the close of the program on that occasion, according to a letter received in London the other day from Guy Charlton Lee, president of the National Society for Broader Education, under whose auspices the company appeared. In his letter he characterizes Miss Lauer's conduct as disgraceful.

"The Wisdom of This World Is Foolishness With God," Said St. Paul.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Syracuse, N.Y., Aug. 8.— Pastor Russell preached here today on the text, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth; Thy Word is Truth." (John 17:17.) He spoke as follows:

Today we find that the great majority of people think very little about the Word of God, so that as a matter of fact our great colleges teach nothing pertaining to the Bible. Years ago it was quite customary that the Bible should have a prominent place in the schools, and the pupils were all under religious influences; for nearly every college was under the control of some denomination. This gave them a sectarian bias, however; and to whatever extent they were sectarian they were not free to study Truth.

But the world in its wisdom has been leaving everything pertaining to the Bible. To-day our college-bred men are the greatest opponents of the Word of God. The great majority of those graduated from our colleges within the past thirty years are total unbelievers in the Bible as God's Inspired Word. Many of them are ministers, who select their texts from the Bible and who retain a certain respect for it. Their parents venerated it, and so the sons still cherish it as they would an old friend. They regard it as they would a pair of old shoes that their great-grandfather had used—not that the shoes would have any intrinsic value, but that they were great-grandfather's shoes. Then the Bible is a convenient place from which to get texts. They know, too, that a great many people are not college-bred and still reverence the Old Book. They like to condescend to the extent of showing that they do not altogether ignore the sentiments of the common people.

If cross-examined carefully, probably ninety-five of every hundred of these would say, "I do not believe the Bible is the Word of God." Although many ministers do not so express themselves in the pulpit, they do so in private. As an instance of clerical unbelief in the teachings of Scripture, take the case of Rev. Dr. Aked. This well-known clergyman moved some years ago to the Pacific Coast, and became president of the Church Federation in San Francisco. Both orally and in print this gentleman expressed his utter unbelief in the prehuman existence of our Lord Jesus—his belief being that our Lord was merely an ordinary man, a fine man. This view was published broadcast.

The next day somebody came out in the San Francisco papers and said that with such sentiments Dr. Aked should resign his position as president of the Church Federation, that certainly nobody would be desirable in that position who did not believe that Jesus had more than human nature—who thus discarded the Bible. The day following, Dr. Aked resigned, saying that he did not wish to offend anybody, etc. The Church Federation of ministers met, and reelected him on the basis of his profession that he did not believe that Jesus Christ had either a prehuman existence or a superior birth! As far as I know, Dr. Aked is still president of the Church Federation; and those ministers that re-elected him, seventy-eight out of a hundred, were willing to come out in public and say so.

The point to which I am calling attention is this: The colleges and the ministers have abandoned the Word of God. The preachers like to select a text from it, just as they might on other occasions quote from Shakespeare. So far as we may judge, this is the general sentiment amongst them. Are they then sanctified by the Truth, the Word of God? If they declare that God has given a message to the world or to the Church, where do they find it, if not in the Bible?

The majority of the preachers do not believe in personal inspiration, except in the sense in which some people may be said to have a sort of intuition for music, etc., and so might be called inspired—that artist was inspired when painting that picture or composing that tune. But as for any belief in such inspiration as the Bible teaches—that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit," not knowing what they were saying—I doubt that five per cent. of the ministers thus believe the Bible to be the Word of God. (2 Peter 1:21; 1 Peter 1:10-12.) With the religious teachers and preachers in this condition of unbelief, is it any wonder that true religion is at a discount with the people? It would be strange if matters were different. Jesus said, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith upon the earth?" You are witnesses with me that He has come and has found very little faith.—2 Peter 3:3-9.

Away back in the time of the Prophet Daniel, God declared that in the Time of the End He would grant a special blessing upon Bible students. (Daniel 12:1-10.) And here we are, down in the Time of the End! Many are running to and fro in automobiles, electric trams, steam railroads, etc. Knowledge is increasing everywhere. But the worldly-wise do not understand; for these things of God's Word are hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes—those not too wise in matters pertaining to this world. (Matt. 11:25.) These accept the Word of God and are guided by it. To these, therefore, has come a great blessing.

Our Lord also spoke about the end of the Gospel Age. His parable of The Ten Virgins refers not to the world, but to the Church—the wise and the foolish in the Church of Christ. (Matthew 25:1-13.) In the end of the Age all the virgins—all justified believers, were ready to meet Him. But the Bridegroom tarried, and for a while all the virgins slumbered and slept. Then came the Message, "Behold the Bridegroom"—He is here! All the virgins awakened. The wise virgins had oil in their vessels. They trimmed their lamps (Psalm 119:105); they saw the Truth, and were prepared to follow the Bridegroom in to the Marriage of the Lamb.

But the foolish virgins did not have the light. When they asked the wise virgins for oil, the wise virgins declared that they could not spare it. The oil represents the Holy Spirit and the enlightenment which it brings. The foolish virgins go to buy when they give time for study and investigation—time taken from business, pleasure, and worldly affairs, that they may obtain the oil which God is pleased that His people should have. Those who do not find time for investigation do not wish to have the oil, the light. Although they are true Christians, yet they are not willing to pay the price and get the oil. Whoever is now rejoicing in the light of Present Truth will testify that it cost him something—something of worldly influence, time, attention, thought—to have the oil and the light, to make ready to go in to the Marriage.

How well the Master understood the present situation! God wished the light to cost something. To some of olden time our Lord said, "Sit down and count the cost"—how much the light will cost you—what discipleship will cost. After having put your hand to the plow, do not look longingly back to the things of the world. God is not pleased with such service. Whoever prefers the world, the flesh, and the Devil may stay with them. During the Millennial Age the Lord will deal with that class, and will give them mercy, blessings. But now He is calling for a special class that delight to do the Father's will, that do not need to be urged, pushed, and whipped. They must have the spirit of the Master, of whom it is written: "I delight to do Thy will, O My God. Thy Law is written in My heart."

Should any of this class come under a measure of difficulty, and temporarily become weak in the doing of the Lord's will, He will give them the necessary experiences, if their hearts are right. He will awaken them from their lethargy, just as in the parable all the foolish virgins were awakened.

God is not seeking to deceive people or to force them into the Kingdom. During this Gospel Age He has merely sent forth His Message to gather out those who wished to respond. God has been taking out a people for His name—using no force, no compulsion, merely His Word. We heard the call, speaking peace through Jesus Christ. Our hearts responded, and we came back into harmony with God. The Word informed us that through the death of His Son God had made all arrangements for covering our sins; and that He was willing to receive us just as if we had not been sinners—willing to take us into His family and make us His heirs, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord.

But all this was merely the voice, the promise, of God. There was nothing to insist upon our becoming children of God; and if we were received into His family it was because we willingly, intentionally, gave ourselves to Him. All through the Gospel Age the Word of God has gone forth. If He had sent force, He could quickly have gathered all that He desired. After a few miracles people would have waked up and said, "What will happen to us if we do not get right with God?" That class will be dealt with by and by. Messiah's Kingdom will manifest the Power and the Wisdom of God.

Coming back to our text, we see that the Lord sent forth His Word, to accomplish a certain mission. His Word is Truth—not truth on every subject, but on the most important ones. Of these important subjects the principal one is that which God purposes to teach all His intelligent creatures—obedience to Himself. All other education will prove to be valueless, perhaps injurious, unless associated with obedience to God.

The world is becoming very much discontented. People are unhappy; they crave more money and less work. Nobody is satisfied except true Christians. The majority of professed Christians are under the delusions of the present time. But the true Christian has that which is satisfactory. Having given his all to the Lord, he has received the blessed assurance that all things shall work together for good to them that love God, to the called according to His purposes. Therefore he is content to let the Heavenly Father shape his affairs. Should he get out of work, God knows how to provide employment. He could feed Elijah by the brook, the ravens bringing the Prophet the necessary food.—1 Kings 17:5, 6.

One cannot fellowship with the world, and at the same time be great in the Lord. We prefer to be amongst those to whom the Master will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The knowledge that God is for us and loves us is a satisfying portion to heart and mind. Having left the world to follow Jesus and daily seeking to walk in His steps, the Church class are loved of the Father. They are the ones whom He has called.

In the beginning God created the Lord Jesus, the Logos. (Colossians 1:15; Revelation 3:14.) Then the Logos, as His active Agent, made the different orders of spirit beings, and finally man. (John 1:1-3.) After man had fallen into sin, God said, "We will let him have his experience with death and its concomitants. In due time I will send a great Redeemer, to ransom Adam and all his posterity. During the Seventh Thousand-Year Day of man's existence this Redeemer will take charge of humanity. Meantime I will have nothing to do with them until they are restored to perfection."

But while God was thus resting from His earthly creation, He considered it a good time to bring in a New Creation. The first of this New Creation was the One who redeemed mankind. He passed through His experiences and testings eighteen hundred and more years ago. But this was not all of the Divine Plan. As the Apostle says, there was a secret which God had kept hidden from before the foundation of the world—His Purpose to have, not merely a great Redeemer for mankind, but a people taken out from amongst humanity to be the Church of the Firstborns. These were to constitute the New Creation, of which the Redeemer would become the Head.

This work of gathering the Church class has been progressing for nearly nineteen centuries. All who have been begotten of the Holy Spirit are members of the New Creation, to whom old things have passed away, and all things have become new. (2 Corinthians 5:17.) From the very moment of their spirit-begetting, the light of the Truth begins to enlighten the minds of these New Creatures. They begin to see something of the lengths and breadths, the heights and depths, of God's character. It is a revelation. The Word of God is illuminating; the Holy Spirit has great illuminating power, and gradually fills more and more with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God.

Of this class God says, "Gather My saints together unto Me, those who have made a Covenant with Me by sacrifice." (Psalm 50:5.) He does not say, Those who have made a covenant to enter some church system, although some may have made a covenant with God and ignorantly with some church system also. Many people like to count themselves in amongst God's people, yet they have never entered into a covenant with Him. Apparently they think that they will receive the same reward as will those who have entered into such a covenant; but they are mistaken. No one will receive the Prize of the High Calling except those who have entered the race in the proper way and have run according to the prescribed rules.

Whoever makes this Covenant of Sacrifice is walking in the Master's footsteps. Our Lord made it at the age of thirty years. At Jordan He gave Himself, a perfect man, His time, His will—everything—to do the Father's will, whatever that might be. The Father indicated His acceptance by begetting our Lord with the Holy Spirit and by giving Him the enlightenment that goes with it. Whoever would be His footstep follower must also covenant to give his time, his influence, his money—everything—to the Lord. Then the Lord says, "I will place in your care those things which you have given Me. If you demonstrate your faithfulness as steward of these little things, I will know that you can be trusted with the greater things of the Kingdom. If you try to withhold what you have consecrated, you have not the spirit for which I am looking. I am seeking those who love Me and desire to serve Me."

From first to last the Bible is in harmony with itself. This is God's Message. This is His way of reaching His Elect, whom He desires to take out of the world. For nineteen centuries the Church has been engaged in calling men apart from the world that they might gain Divine favor and joint-heirship with Jesus in His Kingdom.

"Sanctify them through Thy Truth; Thy Word is Truth." The world does not have this Message; therefore its truth cannot sanctify. Mankind are seeking otherwise, and are getting more or less confused and further away from God through their studies. It is a remarkable fact that we seldom find any one well versed in the sciences who has any faith in God or in the Bible. Men have only the truth that the Prophet Moses discounted. (Hebrews 11:26.) This is the world's portion to-day. But the Science which will sanctify toward God, the Science in which we are in harmony with God, in which we are now happy and will be during the Time of Trouble, is ours. Faithful is He who has called us, who will also sanctify us, according to the riches of His grace in Christ Jesus our Lord.—1 Thessalonians 5:23, 24.

Canadian Fruit Trade.

As showing to some extent how much a good fruit-growing means to Canada it is worth while noting the amount of trade formerly done by the countries at war that lies open for cultivation by this country. At the Canadian Fruit Growers' Conference held at Grimsby last September, Mr. J. A. Ruddick, Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, stated that he had taken a period of five years, and that he had found the importations of apples from Germany to Britain varied each year from 5,000 to 14,000 bushel boxes, from Belgium from 100,000 to 500,000 boxes, from France from 50,000 to 575,000 boxes, and from Portugal from 175,000 to 350,000 boxes. Of pears the importations varied from 4,480 to 56,000 bushel boxes from Germany, from 262,800 to 508,480 boxes from Belgium, and from 422,440 to 506,160 boxes from Portugal. Large quantities were also imported from the Netherlands which may not be available. Mr. Ruddick prognosticated an increased demand for dried and evaporated fruit from Great Britain for use in the army. In 1913 Canada exported of this line to the United Kingdom 121,188 pounds, to Newfoundland 10,899 pounds, and to Germany 247,802 pounds. Of course the trade with Germany will be cut off, but the exportations should expand in other directions.

Cornless Feet

Are Very Common Now

A few years ago they were not. People pared corns and kept them. Or they used an inefficient treatment.

Then the Blue-jay plaster was invented. That ended corn pains instantly for everyone who used it. But it also gently undermined the corn, so in two days it all came out. And this without one bit of pain or soreness.

One told another about it, until millions came to use it. Now those people never keep a corn. As soon as one appears, they remove it.

We urge you to do that. Prove Blue-jay on one corn. If you hesitate, let us send you samples free. If the pain does stop—if the corn does go—think what it means to you. It means a lifetime without corns. Your own friends, by the dozens, probably, know that this is so.

Baby Thriving Mother Happy

EVERY mother and nurse is anxious about baby's health during the hot weather. The dread of colic is ever present, and the awful infantile mortality in summer cannot be forgotten.

Baby can only thrive during the summer if his food—being proof against contamination—is absolutely pure, is suited to his age and powers, and is wholly digestible and nourishing.

Remember—that as baby's digestive capabilities increase the "Allenburys" Foods Nos. 1, 2 & 3—the only progressive dietary for infants—provide all the essential elements in right proportions to ensure healthy growth and development.

The Milk Foods Nos. 1 & 2 need only boiling water to be added to make them ready for use; trouble is thereby saved and harmful germs avoided. The No. 3 Food is a specially prepared Malted Food that is easily digested and exceptionally nutritious for children over 6 months of age who have been weaned.

Doctors, Nurses and Parents throughout the world use and recommend these nourishing Foods.

NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS

By

Rosa Nanchette Carey

Author of "Aunt Diana," "Averil," "Merle's Crusade," "Only the Governess," etc.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

They did not walk four abreast, as they used to do in the Oldfield lanes; but Nan led the way with Mr. Drummond, and Phillis and Dulce dropped behind.

Archie was a little silent; but presently he said, quite frankly, as though he had known her for years—but from the first moment he had felt strangely at home with these girls.—

"Do you know, you have thrown a fresh light on a vexed subject? I have been worrying myself dreadfully about Grace. I wanted her to live with me because there was more sympathy between us than there ever will be between my sister Mattie and myslf. We have more in common, and think the same on so many subjects; and I knew how happy I could have made her.

"Yes, I see," returned Nan; and she looked up at him in such an interested way that he found no difficulty in going on:

"We had planned for years to live together; but when I accepted the living, and the question was mooted in the family council, my mother would not hear of it for a moment. She said Grace could not possibly be spared."

"Well, I suppose not, after what you have told me. But it must have been a great disappointment to you both," was Nan's judicious reply.

"I have never ceased to regret my mother's decision," he returned, warmly; "and as for Grace, I fear she has taken the disappointment grievously to heart."

"Oh, I hope not!"

"Isabel writes to my sister Mattie that Grace is looking thin and pale and has lost her appetite, and she thinks the mother is getting uneasy about her; and I cannot help worrying myself about it, and thinking how all this might have been avoided."

"I think you are wrong in that," was the unexpected answer. "When one has acted rightly to the very best of one's power, it is of no use worrying about consequences."

"How do you mean?" asked Archie, very much surprised at the decided tone in which Nan spoke. He had thought her too soft in manners to possess much energy and determination of character; but he was mistaken.

"It would be far worse if your sister had not recognized her duty and refused to remain at home. One cannot find happiness if one moves out of one's allotted niche; but of course you know all this better than I, being a clergyman. And, oh! how beautifully you spoke to us last Sunday!" finished Nan, remembering all at once that she was usurping his place and preaching a little sermon of her own.

"Never mind that," he replied, impatiently; "tell me what you mean. There is something behind your speech; you think I am wrong in pitying poor Grace so much?"

"If you ask me so plainly, I must say yes, though perhaps I am not competent to judge; but, from what you tell me, I think you ought not to pity her at all. She is fulfilling her destiny. Is she not doing the work given her to do? and what can any girl want more? You should trust your mother, I think, Mr. Drummond, for she would not willingly overwork her. Mothers are mothers; you need not be afraid," said Nan, looking up in her clear honest way.

"Thank you; you have taken a weight off my mind,' returned Archie, more moved by this than he cared to own. In a moment scales seemed to fal from the young man's eyes as he walked along gravely and silently by Nan. "Why, what manner of girls could these be?" he thought; "frolicsome as kittens, and yet possessing the wisdom of mature womanhood?" And those few simple words of Nan abided long with him.

What if he and Grace were making a mistake, and there was no hardship in her case at all, but only clear duty and a most high privilege, as Nan hinted? What if hi s mother were right, and only they were wrong? The idea was salutary, but hardly pleasant; for he had certainly aided and abetted Grace in her discontent, and had doubtless increased her repinings at her dull surroundings. Surely Grace's talents had been given her for a purpose; else why was she so much cleverer than the others,—so gifted with womanly accomplishments? And that clear head of hers—she had a genius for teaching, he had never denied that. Was his mother, a sensible large-sighted woman in her way, to be secretly condemned as a tyrant, and wanting in material tenderness for Grace, because she had made use of this giftedd daughter for the good of her other children, and had refused to part with her at Archie's request?

Archie began to feel uncomfortable, for conscience was waxing warm within him; and ther had been a grieved hurt tone in his mother's letters of late, as though she had felt herself neglected by him.

"Mothers are mothers; you need not be afraid," Nan had said, with simple wholesome faith in the instincts of motherhood; and the words had come home to him with the strongest power.

His poor harassed mother,—what a hard life hers had been? Archie began to feel his heart quite tender towards her; perhaps she was a little severe and exacting with the girls, but they none of them understood her in the least, 'for her bark was always worse than her bite," thought Archie; and girls, at least the generality of them, are sometimes aggravating.'

He thought of the weary times she must have had with his father,—for Mr. Drummond could make himself disagreeable to his wife when things went wrong with him, and the sullen fortitude with which he bore his reversal of fortune gave small opening to her tenderness; the very way in which he shirked all domestic responsibilities, leaving on her shoulders the whole weight of the domestic machinery and all the home-management had hardened and embittered her.

A large family and small means, little support from her husband,—who interfered less and less with domestic matters,—all this had no doubt fostered the arbitrary will that governed the Drummond household. If her husband had only kept her in check,—if he had supported her authority, and not left her to stand alone,—she would have been, not a better woman for Archie knew his mother was good, but she would have been softer and more lovable, and her children would have seen deeper into her heart.

Some such thoughts as these passed through Archie's mind as he walked beside Nan; but he worked them out more carefully when he was alone that night. Just before they reached the Friary, he had started another subject; for, turning to Phillis and Dulce, whom he had hitherto ignored, he asked them whether he might enroll one or all of them among his Sunday-School teachers.

Phillis's eyes sparkled at this.

"Oh, Nan, how delightful! it will remind us of Oldfield."

"Yes, indeed;" chinned in Dulce, who had left her infant-class with regret; but, to their surprise, Nan demurred.

"At Oldfield things were very different," she said, decidedly, "we played all the week, and it was no hardship to teach the dear children on Sunday; but now we shall have to work so hard that we shall be glad of one day's rest."

"But surely you might spare us one hour or two in the afternoon?" returned Archie, putting on what Grace called "his clerical face."

"In the afternoons mother will be glad of our company, and sometimes we shall indulge in a walk. No, Mr. Drummond, our weeks-days are too full of work, and we shall need all the rest we can get on Sunday." And, with a smile, Nan dismissed the subject.

Phillis spoke regretfully of it when he had left them.

"It would have been so nice," she pleaded; but Nan was inexorable.

"You can go if you like, Phil; but I think mother is entitled to that one afternoon in the week, and I will not consent to parish work on that account; and then I am sure we shall often be so tired." And Nan's good sense, as usual, carried the day.

After that they all grouped round the window in the little parlor, and repeated to their mother every word of their conversation with Mr. Drummond.

Mrs. Challoner grew alarmed and tearful in a moment.

"Oh, my darlings, promise me to be more careful for the future!" she pleaded. "Of course it was only fun, Phillis, and he will not think anything of it. Still, in a strange place, where no one knows you——"

"Dulce and I will never run a race again, I think I can promise you that," repeated Phillis, very grimly, who felt that "Bravo, Atalanta!" would haunt her in her dreams.

"And—and I would not walk about with Mr. Drummond, thought he is our clergyman and a very gentlemanly person. People might talk; and in your position, my poor dears"—Mrs. Challoner hesitated, for she was very nice in her scruples, and not for worlds would she have hinted to he' daughters that Mr. Drummond was young and unmarried, and a very handsome man in the bargain. "You see, 'cannot always be with you, and, as you have to work for your living, and cannot be guarded like other girls, you have all the more need to be circumspect. You don't think me over-strict, do you, darlings?"

"No, dear mother, you are perfectly right," returned Nan, kissing her. "I knew how you would feel, and so we came home directly to get rid of him; it would never do for the vicar of the parish to be seen walking about with dressmakers."

"Don't, Nan!" exclaimed Phillis, with a shudder. Nevertheless, as she turred away she remembered how she had enjoyed that walk down the Braidwood Road that very morning, when he offered to carry home Mrs Trimming's dress and she would not let him.

To be Continued.

RECRUITING QUIET NOW.

Excitement of the First Days Has Largely Passed.

Ever since the raising of the first Canadian contingent, when men wept and fought for places in the quotas from various regiments, recruiting has been a quiet and passionless process. The second contingent was raised with less violence than the first, and the third and now the fourth, with ever increasing serenity. Recruiting is now like enrolling men for construction work.

This is the manner in which it is done. The regiment receives a call for a draft of fifty men. A lieutenant is given the order and three or four N. C. O.'s and men to assist him. A doctor, usually some well-known practitioner attached to the regiment, arranges to be on hand at certain hours to examine the recruits. The lieutenant and the N.C.O.'s gather round a table and begin operations.

"Recruits wanted" signs are posted up in conspicuous places. The "recruiting sergeant" and one or two men go out, sometimes, after the British system, with rosettes of tricolor ribbon on their caps. The posters are supposed to catch the eyes of the busy man. The recruiters with their rosettes are supposed to visit the places where men congregate. Some fine recruiting has been done in pool rooms, hotel bars, and on street corners where men lounge. Let this fact not shock the dear old ladies, for it must be known that many a lad who used to lounge on our street corners and loaf in our pool rooms is now giving his life in defence of our lounging places and of the drawing-rooms and cosy quarters where we loaf.

Usually on the opening day recruits begin to call, some busy men whose dormant patriotic urge has been awakened by the poster, some whom the visit of the recruiting sergeant has presented the opportunity and the sudden inspiration. He enters the room and the officer and N. C. O.'s question him as to his age, business, general health, experience, and the strength of his desire. If he seems to fill the bill he is told to call around at a later hour when the regimental doctor is on hand.

The doctor examines his teeth first, and if he has sound teeth, or a good plate of false ones, fitting snug, he is ordered to strip. The doctor prods and punches him, makes him walk on his toes, and then, if heart, lungs, eyes, teeth are sound, and he has no flat feet or hammer toes, varicose veins, or other fault in bone or flesh, he is passed as fit.

He tumbles into his clothes. The dapper young lieutenant swears him in, signs him onto a document, and then, if he is married or under 21, is given a "consent," a paper on which wife or mother must express her consent to the enlistment.

Then drill begins. A recruit's life is not all balm. He is drilled hard at first, and sometimes blemishes unseen by the doctor appear under the eye of the drill sergeant. To have a man otherwise fit weeded out by the physical and military drill is a common enough occurrence. But it is amazing to see the change a week of this drill makes in these men. They are no longer white-colored city folk. They turn a healthy, flushed red, which the sun and wind of the military camp soon finishes to the famous British tan. Cheek bones rise out of lean, healthy cheeks. Legs, arms, shoulders, and neck stiffen and harden. It is a wonder that the Government does not provide two such weeks of training for the whole nation, as the Spartans used to do, or as the Swedes are said now to be doing.

Why He Failed.

"I understand Jinks has found it necessary to close up his electrical business. What was the matter?"

"Well, as nearly as I can make out, when he failed to spark properly, his banking connections became short circuited, and his customers failed to supply the necessary current. These misfortunes tore the insulation from his lines of credit and he became afraid he was no longer a live wire.

"The poor fellow had to shut up shop. As a matter of fact," said the narrator, dodging a blow, "he didn't know what else to do."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Ruinous.

Madge—Gossip doesn't pay. Marjorie—I'm beginning to agree with you, my dear. The last secret I heard cost me over $2 for extra telephone tolls.—Judge.

Huge Man Buried.

The funeral of the largest man in Elgin county took place recently in the Township of Bayham. His name was John H. Dennis, and he lived all his life on the farm where he died. When eleven years old he weighed 200 pounds, and at his death his weight was 569 pounds. His waist measure was nine feet, his chest eight feet. The casket was 30 by 36 by 6 feet, and the body had to be carried outside and put into it where it lay, under a tent.

Tons of Dressings Needed.

A doctor in charge of one of the smaller hospitals caring for the wounded says that the nature of many of the wounds is such that dressings must be changed every 20 minutes or so. "At this rate," he adds, "we shall need tons of surgical supplies." A Toronto doctor, when asked the result of a lack of proper facilities, answered briefly, "Blood poisoning."

TURNER SETTLEMENT.

The funeral of the late Mr. Harford Faulkner took place on Thursday, July 29th, and was conducted from the Town Hall, Wallbridge, to Guffin's cemetery. Death took place on the 26th, quite unexpectedly. Mr. Faulkner was a young man 35 years of age, and leaves a widow and mother to mourn his loss. A popular young man, respected by all who knew him, his death came as a severe shock to all, and a large number of his friends showed deep sympathy and feeling by following him to the grave. A service of a very impressive character was conducted by Rev. A. E. Richmond, assisted by Rev. L. M. Sharpe, in the Sidney Baptist Church, where the deceased sang in the choir for a number of years. The Masons of Stirling, with whom Mr. Faulkner was associated, conducted the Masonic burial service. We extend to the bereaved ones our heart-felt sympathy.

MEN TRESPASSING

A woman reported to the police last evening, that two men were trespassing on the grounds of her home on the northern part of Albert street. The incident took place on Tuesday evening, so the police could not do much more than to get a description and keep on the look-out for the men. They had bicycles.

A WOMAN'S PATRIOTISM

Some time ago a Peterborough young man charged with improper conduct was allowed out on parole and had to report monthly to the chief. The young man in question has again "fallen off the water wagon." The chief met the young fellow's mother a few days ago and told her the young fellow had either to enlist, keep sober, or go to jail. The lady replied: "I'd sooner see him go to jail than enlist."

CAMPBELLFORD RECRUITS.

The citizens of Campbellford turned out on Monday in large numbers to say farewell to 26 men who are joining the troops. They paraded to the station led by the citizens' band. This makes over 90 from here, and there will be others later this week.

SALT MONEY.

Your salary is your "salt money." Soldiers once received salt as part of their pay. When the salt was commuted for cash the latter was called "salerium," salt money, or "salary."

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

BELLEVILLE.

Major H. R. Wilson, D.A.A., and Q.M.G., had his father, Rev. W. D. P. Wilson, Belleville, as a visitor on Tuesday afternoon at Barriefield Camp. Rev. Mr. Wilson has three other sons beside the major in uniform, and as he expresses it, for a family of Scotch Covenanters they are doing as well as they can. Capt. Donald D. Wilson is in England waiting to go to the front with the Canadian Army Dental Corps, and Sergt. H. V. Wilson, 89th Battalion, is also in England waiting to go to France. Dr. Malcolm Wilson, Belleville, is a captain in the 15th Regiment.

A cable has been received by his parents which states that Lieut. "Ken." Williams has arrived safely at Folkestone, England. Lieut. Williams went overseas with an Army Service Corps Detail from Niagara Camp. Mr. Williams is well known in Belleville, having been stationed here last spring.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP.

Lieut.-Col. C. T. Wilkinson, officer commanding the 41st Regiment, Brockville, has presented a cup to the 59th Battalion, now in camp at Barriefield. It is for competition in weekly sports and the company winning the greatest number of points before the Battalion leaves Canada will become the owner.

Pte. Madaire, 59th Battalion, who deserted from the camp a week ago and is supposed to have stolen a horse from Mrs. J. Bruce's livery, has been rounded up at Lindsay. The horse and buggy have been recovered near Stirling and will be brought back to the city.

The machine gun school, under the direction of Lieut. Stethem, dug some new trenches south of the Gananoque road yesterday. A portion of the trench is for regular infantry work, and the rest for machine gun operation. The trench is complete, with bomb and splinter proof coverings, and at a distance of 100 yards the keenest eye could hardly detect the presence of the trench as a fighting hole in the ground.

There are now 41 officers taking the course of P.S.I.. Major Barragar and a subordinate staff are conducting the lectures and drill.

Major Anderson of the 45th Regiment, Lindsay, was in camp yesterday, and brought with him 21 recruits for the 59th Battalion. Lindsay has done big things in the way of recruiting since the war broke out, and it is keeping up its reputation as a recruiting centre.

KINGSTON

A regiment (half battalion) of Russian soldiers is to be established in Canada, and already its mobilization has begun at Kingston, 35 Russians who recruited with the 77th in Ottawa, having been sent forward. Until there are sufficient to form the half battalion they will be attached to the 59th. When H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught was at Barriefield recently he displayed great interest in the Russian recruits, and expressed the desire to see them formed into a composite regiment.

Rest Home for Soldiers.

A scheme which originated a short time ago for work among convalescent Canadians in France or those needing a short rest from the strain of military duty has now become an accomplished fact. The idea was started by Mrs. William Douglas, a Canadian woman with a considerable knowledge of life in the north of France, and was taken up by prominent Canadian citizens who realized the importance and value of a Canadian Rest Home within easy reach of the firing line. A committee was formed, with Mrs. Burnham as convener and Mr. J. B. O'Brian as treasurer, and plans for the work were formulated. Owing to the strictness of the military authorities with regard to all private enterprise in France an advance committee was sent to Dieppe, consisting of Mrs. Douglas, Miss Burnham, and Miss Tate, to see for themselves whether the demand for their work was a real one. So successful were they in their negotiations that they have received a full sanction to do all that is possible for wounded convalescents or for those needing a rest. They have taken a large, modern villa on the sea front in Dieppe, and this house, which is splendidly appointed in every way, has been approved by the British Red Cross Society. As soon as preliminary arrangements had been made the staff of voluntary helpers sailed to join their fellow-workers in Dieppe. These women, Miss Chadwick, Miss Gaviller, Miss Hirschfelder, and Miss Hudspeth, together with Miss Murphy, a trained nurse, have arrived at the home, and have started their duties under the supervision of the Royal Army Medical Corps. The treasurer of the fund is Mr. J. B. O'Brian of Toronto.

Cargo Shipped 10,000 Miles.

In order that the proper kind of lumber for the construction of piers and docks may be available at Port Nelson, where the Canadian Government is building a railroad and steamship terminal on the shores of the Hudson Bay, it has been found necessary to send a steamer around the greater part of North America. The steamer Durley Chine, which left Vancouver, B.C., June 30, will cover approximately 10,000 miles to land her cargo of Douglas fir at Port Nelson, which is only about 1,200 miles distant from Vancouver in an air line. Her route lies down the Pacific coast, through the Panama Canal, up the Atlantic coast to Newfoundland, and thence into Hudson Bay.

In preparation for this season's work at Port Nelson, a fleet of steamers is fitting out here. Most of these are sailing vessels, equipped for service in stormy and ice-frequented water. Some of them will be used directly by the Canadian Government for the transport of men, construction material and food supplies. Others are engaged by fur companies for the collection of last winter's accumulation of peltries along the Labrador and Hudson Bay coasts.

Premier Borden Seeking a Loan

Reported Arranging for Assistance to the Needy Canadian Railways

LONDON, August 12.—Speculation is rife in London that Sir Robert Borden will do some financing for Canada before he leaves England. It is known here that some of the Canadian railroads need assistance, and that this can only be obtained by a loan from the British Government. Forty million pounds is mentioned as the requirement.

The idea of nationalizing Canadian railways finds little favor in London, the policy being considered a failure in South Africa and Australia.

Regarding his financial mission, Premiler Borden refuses to make a statement, but the fact that his stay has been extended beyond what was at first planned lends color to the belief that some important negotiations are pending.

5,000 OR 6,000 PENSIONS

OTTAWA, August 12.—That at the end of the war Canada will have 5,000 or 6,000 pensions to pay is the estimate made from the experience of the Militia Deparment so far. While on account of the uncertainty as to the length of the struggle precludes any very accurate prediction, it is practically certain that there will be added to the Dominion's yearly expenditure a sum of at least $4,000,000 a year for pensions for the wives and families of dead soldiers and for disabled ones.

Up to the present, however, the number of Canadian soldiers receiving pensions as a result of the present war is only 160, and the amount paid out up to July 31 has been $25,000.

As each application for a pension takes three or four months between the time the soldier falls or is wounded and the date on which the application is finally passed, it is altogether probable that the $2,000,000 set apart for pensions during the present year will be sufficient. It is estimated that already about 1,000 Canadian men of family have fallen in action, but as stated only a small proportion of these cases have been dealt with. These cases are first passed on by the Militia Department and then referred to Major W. S. Conger, Canadian pensions officer.

PARTY OF 1,000 WOUNDED

About a thousand wounded officers and soldiers who are recuperating at Hove and Brighton, were present recently at a garden party given by Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Baron, at St. Ann's Well Gardens, Hove. Invitations were sent out to all the wounded in the district. All the men who could be moved were conveyed to the ground in chars-a-bancs; others shared in the days' enjoyment to the extent of receiving liberal gifts of cigarettes and chocolate. Mr. Baron is the chairman and managing director of Messrs. Carreras, Ltd., who have given about three million "Black Cat" cigarettes for the use of the troops at the front. In the last half-million, 150,000 were specially marked "For the Canadians."

Peace in October Says Berlin Order

Fighting on the Western Front is About to Begin, Says Kaiser

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A significant order relative to a resumption by the Germans of a vigorous offensive in the west has been issued to the Teuton armies in Flanders, according to The Amsterdam Telegraaf. An extract from this order, telegraphed by the Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company, follows:

"Our work now is practically finished in the east, and we are about to begin in the west. Peace is certain in October."

MORE DAIRY PRODUCE

COBOURG, Ont., Aug. 12.—Farmers in this district are evidently beginning to realize that cheese and butter are the proper products of the locality, and the cheese factories are coming back to their own. Although there has been a material lowering of prices of late, chiefly because it is not known whether the export trade will keep up or not, the make of cheese, so far, is much larger than during the same period last year, and it is expected that a fairly high price will be maintained.

BALKAN STATES TO ENTER WORLD WAR

Situation in Various Capitals Hourly Becoming More Menacing —Roumania to be Drawn in—Entry of Bulgars Would Seal the Fate of Constantinople

LONDON, Aug. 12.—There seems more likelihood tonight than ever before that the Balkan States, now bristling with armed troops, will throw themselves into the war. From the various Balkan capitals comes word that the situation is hourly becoming more menacing, while from Germany and Turkey comes the news that the Austro-German alliance, fearful of the Turks' fate in the Dardanelles is about to hurl an army of reinforcements across Serbia and Bulgaria to the relief of the Sultan.

Such action if taken may and probably will, induce Roumania to rush to the aid of Serbia, aligning herself at last on the side of the Entent Powers. A passage cut by the Germans through Serbia would isolate Roumania from the west, a situation which Roumania's statesmen, leaning in favor toward the Entente powers as they do, are naturally not in favor of.

ROUMANIA TO BE DRAWN IN.

From Rome it is learned on supposedly good authority that the Roumanian Ministry has, in fact, already determined to go to Serbia's aid if Germany attempts force a passage through that country to Bulgaria and Turkey. In the absence of thoroughly definite news respecting the situation it is impossible to tell what may be expected of Roumania, although it is conceded in even the most pessimistic quarters that she is more likely to join with the Entente powers than with the Triple Alliance, now represented by Germany, Austria and Turkey.

In Germany the voice of the most insistent patriots has been raised in favor of instant action against Serbia and the opening of a road to the succor of Turkey. This propaganda is being led by Count Reventlow in the Tages Zeitung, who says that the time for quibbling has ceased and nothing will suffice now but the invasion of Serbia.

Meanwhile Serbia and the Entente powers are doing everything in their powers to renew the Balkan League, securing its sympathies to the Entente powers, and thus erecting a strong barrier between Germany and Austria from Turkey.

In Constantinople notice has been given out from the mosques that Germany is about to send an army to the Dardanelles. Hope there is running to an ecstatic height. It is even hinted by the newspapers that the campaign against Egypt may be expected to take shape soon.

It is known that Germany and Austria have massed a considerable force at Orsowa, in Hungary, the natural point from which to direct an invasion of Serbia. The presence of troops here is reported to have drawn strong Roumanian forces to the frontier. while the Serbs, on their side of the line, are making preparations for a fierce resistance to any attempt at invasion.

What of Bulgaria ?

While Bulgaria has heretfore shown a strong predilection in favor of Germany and Turkey, the Entente diplomats are now more confident that their offers of integrity to that country have met with approval. Bulgaria, of course is one of the most, if not the most important factor in the equation because of her geographical position, standing as she does a natural barrier or help to any endeavor by the Germans to send reinforcements to Turkey.

Officer's Wife Seeks Divorce; Hubby at War

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—Among the nine applications for divorce made since last session of Parliament, and which will be dealt with by the divorce committee of the Senate next session, is one by the wife of a Canadian officer now in Flanders. Application is made on the usual grounds.

The officer has written the authorities here asking that the petition be not heard until the war is over, and he adds that "in all probability there will be no necessity then for going on with the case.'

When he wrote he was about to go into the trenches.

ALLIES CANCEL ORDERS FOR TWO MILLION BUSHELS OF WHEAT

(Canadian Press Special)

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Grain dealers here are puzzled by the cancellation of purchases of nearly two million bushels of wheat by representatives of the Allies. One grain operator here says "They begged out of their contracts, accepting a loss of from eight to ten cents a bushel."

James Patten, formerly famous as a wheat speculator, said it meant either that Europe finds she cannot pay, or expects to get her wheat from Russia. Another suggestion is that England intends buying her wheat in Canada and Australia on credit and using her gold to buy munitions of war in the United States.

Mercer Plant Must Fill Big Order Before Winter

MERCER, Pa., Aug. 12.—So insistent has become the demand of the allied European governments for haste in filling an order for over a million camp stoves given some time ago that, the Reznor Stove company of this place issued a notice to all employes that hereafter there would be no Saturday afternoon holiday and that the working day would be increased a half hour

The demand that the allies' contract be entirely filled before the cold weather sets in resulted in the order.

War Profits are To be Limited

LONDON, Aug. 13.—George Joseph George, minister of munitions, announces that 245 establishments have been declared "controlled establishments" under the Munitions of War Act. As a result of this control, the profits of employers are limited. Any excess over such a limit becomes payable to the national exchequer.

"By this provision," says Mr. Lloyd George, "parliament has assured that sacrifices made by workmen are made for the nation as a whole, and not for the advantage of individuals. On the other hand, during the period of the war, any rules or shop customs which may have the effect of limiting the output of munitions are suspended in controlled establishments."

PREMIER BORDEN VISITS THE BRITISH ADMIRALTY

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Premier Borden to-day had a conference with the British Admiralty concerning matters of importance to Canada. He subsequently had a conference with Sir Edward Grey, Foreign Secretary.

During the afternoon he visited the Blinded Soldiers and Sailors' Hospital, St. Regent's Park. Sir Robert has been greatly impressed with the excellent work carried on by the Canadaian Red Cross in London and by the similarly effective work carried on by the Canadian Contingent Association in providing comforts for the soldiers at the front. Both these associations had been splendidly supported in Canada, and those carrying on the work in London have spoken to Sir Robert in terms of most grateful appreciation of the assistance given by the people of the Dominion.

Tragic Romance Comes to a Close

Soldier for Whose Love Princess Killed Herself Dies in Warsaw Fight

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 12.—The battle for the possession of Warsaw brought to a close the tragic romance of Princess Sophia, only daughter of Prince Wilhelm of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, and Baron Hans Victor von Bleichroeder. The son of the famous German banker was killed while fighting before Warsaw on August 1. He was at one time engaged to Princess Sophia, who committed suicide in September, 1913, when her father, Prince Wilhelm, refused to consent to their marriage.

First news of the Baron's death was received here to-night from Berlin. He was killed, it is stated, in the last days of the storming of the Polish capital, less than two years after his sweetheart shot herself at her father's castle in Heidelburg because she could not wed him. He was even barred from her funeral by members of her family.

Grand Duke Ernst of Saxe-Weimar was said to have been responsible for preventing the wedding of the Princess to the banker's son. He was head of the house, and although her father was almost induced to permit the match the Grand Duke refused to allow it unless Princess Sophia renounced all her titles. This she refused to do. Her father was unable to take a stand for his daughter because of his financial relations with the Grand Duke.

JOINS HOLY ROLLERS

Court However, Says Youth is Not Insane

PARERSBURG, W. Va., Aug. 12.—Altouh Arthur Nolan, aged 11, rolls in themud, throws his coat on the ground and jumps and dances in a seeming paroxysm of joy at frequent intervals, he is not insane. This was the decision of the county lunacy commission after the boy's father, J. Nolan, testified. "It's the Holy Ghost in him," said the father.

The boy himself testified he joined the "Holy Rollers," April 1. Since then the religious solace he has crawn from the meetings being held by the sect said, that he has rolled and jumped has filled him with such happiness, he danced for joy.

The charge was preferred against the boy when Mrs. Jennie Frantz, a neighbor of the Nolans, was arrested on a charge of assaulting the boy. She said she became tired of seeing the boy go through his actions in front of her house and that she had given him a thrashing in the hope he would know better in the future.

BEGGAR DROPS HER HANDBAG OF GOLD

Stream of $10 Pieces Proves Woman an Imposter

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—A small woman wearing a shawl and effecting a Polish accent gained admittance to the office of William H. Egan, station master of the Manhattan division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, at the Pennsylvania station. She asked for Mr. Egan and began to cry, saying that her son was dying in Pittsburgh. "Please help me get to Pittsburgh," she begged the station master.

After a brief questioning Mr. Egan started to cross the hall to the ticket office to get a ticket for the woman. She thereupon became excited; her accept disappeared, her hands trembled so in the excitement attending her success that she dropped a handbag she had been clutching to her side. The clasp of the bag broke open and a little stream of $10 gold pieces poured out on the floor. She was shown the door.

NEW OFFENSIVE AGAINST CALAIS

Movement of German Troops Through Belgium Continuous for Days—Fighting in Argonne—French Win Back Trenches Temporarily Held by Enemy

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Aug. 13.—(Afternoon official statement)—In the Artois district a German attack last night to the north of the Chateau of Carleul was easily checked. In the Argonne district the Germans late yesterday afternoon renewed their attacks in the sector between the road from Binarville to Vienne-le-Chateau and the ravine of La Houlette. They were repulsed after a very spirited fight in which hand grenades and bombs were used.

There is nothing to report from the remainder of the front.

London, Aug. 13.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at The Hague telegraphs that a prominent neutral citizen, who has just arrived from Brussels, says that the movement of German troops through Belgium to the western front has been constant for several days.

A significant order of the day predicting resumption by the Germans of a vigorous offensive in the west has been issued to the Teutonic armies in Flanders, according to the Amsterdam Telegraaf. An extract from this order, telegraphed by the Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company, follows:

"Our work in the east is practically finished and we are about to begin in the west. Peace is certain in October."

The French official communication chronicles the recapture through counter-attacks of part of the trenches lost in the Argonne, and the repulse of enemy attacks at other points. There was also some rather severe fighting in the Vosges, in which hand grenades were used.

END OF PUTTEE IN CANADIAN UNIFORM

OTTAWA, Aug. 12.—The woolen "puttee' is shortly to disappear as a distinctive part of the uniform of the Canadian soldiers.

This is in conformity with the reported intention of the British War Office to abandon it. It was stated at the Militia Department today that the Militia Council some time ago considered this question, as it was the testimony of many Canadian soldiers in the South African War that the puttee was unsatisfactory. Their experience there was that it interfered with the circulation on long marches, and it has been found in the Winter campaign in Flanders that this produces frost bite.

The Canadian authorities now are experimenting with a long boot to take the place of the puttee. It will not be the Russian military boot, however, which it is reported the British War Office will supply its troops.

Russians Holding In Check Baltic Flank of Enemy

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The Russians are for the time being holding in check the Baltic flank of the German armies which are struggling to cut the railway from Warsaw to Petrograd, and are battling toward the River Dvina, beyond which lie the roads to the Russian capital.

This has been accomplished by reinforcements, and through the effect of one counter-attack after another.

Kovno still holds out, the German attacks toward Riga have been repulsed, and the railway junction at Dvinsk remains in Russian hands.

PETROGRAD, via London, Aug. 12. An official communication from the headquarters of the Russian army in the Caucasus, dated Aug. 9, made public to-day, says:

"The attempt of the Turks to advance in the direction of Olti and the Passine Valley was everywhere repulsed. In the capture of the Merghe Mir Pass we took three machine guns and some prisoners, including the commanders of two regiments.

"In the direction of the Euphrates the pursuit of the Turks continues. During the last few days one of our columns made prisoners of nineteen officers and 1172 men. We also took 200 wagons loaded with pyroxylin(an explosive compound) and trenching implements. We also seized a quantity of arms and ammuniton and tents. In the villages the enemy has abandoned his wounded. On the roads our troops are finding heaps of ammunition and artillery.'

Another communication said:

"On August 10 in the Passine Valley our troops after an engagement captured the important heights and drove back the Turks toward the west, taking a battalion commander and three other officers and three hundred men prisoners.

"In the direction of the Euphrates the pursuit of the Turks continues. Twenty-one hundred men have been taken prisoner.

Colonial Institute Committee to Report on Scheme

LONDON, August 2.—The report of the After-the -War Committee of the Royal Colonial Institute, to be published shortly, will unfold a scheme for the settlement of soldiers. The main feature will be the back to the land principle, preferably in Canada, but with the option of the other colonies or in Great Britain.

The question who will provide the money is the chief problem for the committee. The committee wants the Imperial and Overseas governments to provide not merely the land and transportaion, but sufficient money to tide the soldier settlers over the non-productive period.

An emigration agent who has just completed a tour of Scotland, reports a marked revival of interest in Canada. Many inquiries were received from young crofters regarding prospects in the Dominion after the war.

GERMAN GOV'T TAKE SERIOUS VIEW OF SOCIALIST SPLIT

Elaborate System of Espionage Established to Prevent Organized Action

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Daily Chronicle's special correspondent, who lately returned from Germany, dealing with the Socialist split in that country, gives a conversation he had with one of the officials of the new movement started by Edward Bernstein and Dr. Liebknecht in opposition to the so-called governmental Socialists. This official said:

"A split of the Social Democratic party, the prevention of which has been the chief aim of all leaders of that party for years past, cannot be averted any longer; indeed, it may be said it has already come about.

"Those who are suspected of planning or advising a strike are terrorized. They are shut out everywhere they go. Their letters are opened. In fact, there is in existence such an elaborate system of spying as to make organized action on the part of the workers absolutely impossible.

"The police take equally severe measures with regard to Socialist literature. Domiciliary visits are frequently paid in suspected quarters. Recently, at a town in Baden, twenty men and women were arrested on a charge of distributing Socialist pamphlets and treated as common criminals.

"The future of the Social Democratic party is not easy to foretell just now. I am sorry to say, many comrades in the army are yielding to the influence of the general wave of enthusiasm for the tax which is passing over the country and are becoming 'plus royaliste que le roi,' but after the war the party struggle will be renewed with increased violence, as it is quite certain that the promises held out to us by the Government will not be fulfilled."

The correspondent added the following question: "Assuming that the people find out after the war that it was not a defensive war, do you think the consequences will be serious?"

"Our people," was the reply, "will never believe that they have been misled. As for myself, I too believe that this war was forced upon Germany But assuming that clear proof to the contrary comes to light, I do not believe that this will materially change public opinion for years to come. No nation can possibly come to any other conclusion after the continued pressure by word and pen which is being brought to bear upon it now."

The correspondent adds: "The statement of my informant clearly shows that as things stand now an organized labor movement to affect the manufacture of war material or the general conduct of the war, or a movement of peace would not have the slightest chance of success. Public opinion, moreover, would be strongly against such a movement, so much so that, as a German remarked to me, 'Not one stone of their buildings would be left upon another if they dared to interfere with the war. A movement for peace can therefore hardly be expected from these quarters.'"

SUGGESTED DUTY ON IMPORTED WHEAT IN GREAT BRITAIN

LONDON, Aug. 12—The Cabinet has received an exhaustive report on ways of increasing the amount of home grown food in 1916 by the Food Supplies Committee of the Board of Agriculture. The committee's chief problem was to find means for sowing an increased amount of wheat acreage in the United Kingdom. Such a course necessarily would involve the plowing and sowing of pasture ground, a speculation which the farmers are somewhat fearful of lest wheat drop to an unremunerative price in 1916.

The committee therefore has recommended that the Government guarantee a price such as will make such a venture profitable, at the same time placing certain duties on imported wheat as a protection to the farmers.

The committee also finding that a sufficient number of farming implements could not be manufactured for an extensive increase in wheat acreage has recommended that the Government by a large quantity of agricultural machinery in the United States.

Commenting on the committee's report the Daily Mail says that it incorporates suggestions of immense importance. Legislation based on the recommendations probably will be submitted to Parliament when it reassembles next month.

8th C.M.R. March To Belleville

Will Arrive in City From Napanee This Evening

At 8.30 a.m. yesterday, Kingston citizens who were on Princess street, saw something which has probably never before been seen on Kingston Sts. It was the 8th Regiment, Canadian Mounted Rifles, under Lieut-Col. J. R. Munro in full war regalia on the start of a hundred mile march through the country. Every man was mounted The men were in their shirt sleeves, and "business' was the word they suggested. On each horse the rider took with him his blanket, rifle, mess-tin, water bottles and bandoliers.

Before leaving the camp ground Col. Munro gave his orders, among them being that the greatest care must be taken of the horses. Two spare horses went with each squadron.

The route taken to Beleville was along Ontario street to Princess street and straight out to Napanee. At the exhibition grounds at Napanee it was planned to spend the night.

Due to the splendid system which Major J. Hamilton, A.D. of S. and T. has biult up. three wagons of the Army Service Corps supplied the 8th C.M.R. with food for the 250 men and fodder for the 250 horses. Meals were to be served regularly on the way. The Army Service Corps were able to do this part of the arrangements as easily as if the regiment was remaining in the camp.

The regiment expected to reach Napanee early Thursday evening and camp in the Exhibition grounds for the night

Official Reception

Front street, before the City Hotel this morning, about half-past eleven o'clock, was the scene of a very inspiring series of musical selections The musicians were the Piper's Band of the 8th C.M.R. of Barriefield, who preceded their regiment to Belleville by train. The band includes 4 pipers and several drummers, all adepts with their instruments. The pipers, while not in Highland regalia, do not look out of place, the spurs, bandoliers and khaki serving in place of kilt and sporan. After treating their audience to an impromptu concert the boys from Barriefield marched to their headquarters, to await the coming of their comrades.

At four o'clock this afternoon His Worship, Mayor Panter, the Aldermen, Ex-Mayor Wills, Mr. F. E. O'Flynn and other prominent citizens will motor to the outskirts of the city to meet the horsemen, and after welcoming them, escort them to their camp grounds in the Agricultural Park.

Letters From Belleville Boys At The Front

DRIVER W. R. SERVISS

The following letters have been received by the parents of Driver W. R. Serviss, of the 1st Canadian Contingent.

France, July 12, 1915

Dear Father:—I received your letter all O. K. and was pleased to get it

I am feeling fine. We are having nice weather over here only it is raining today. The shells are coming over us just the same. Nearly all the boys are making rings out of the pieces of aluminum which they get out of German fuses. I'm going to start to make one today. If it comes out alright I will send you one. And so the Kaiser says there will be no winter campaign. I hope he is right, and in other words that we win the war; but of course you never can tell what way it will go. I believe the old word will come true—The pen is mightier than the sword. It can't come any too soon for me. Did you know a fellow named Tuite? It's not Ray nor Ted. I don't remember what his first name is. He came down with the Toronto Engineers. There are lots of green apples over here. I hope that Auntie will not be lonesome on her holidays as I won't be there. And so you say we are not cowards. Just the same there are lots of Canadians walking the streets in Canada that are cowards. I mean young fellows who have nothing to stop them from coming. Well, I guess I will have to say good-bye for this time, hoping this will find you all well. I remain,

Your son,
RAY.

France, July 25, 1915.

Dear Mother,—

I received your letters and snapshots all O.K., and was more than pleased to hear from you. I don't know what to think of the news I get from you and Minnie about her letters. Every letter I get from her I answer at once. I wore the colors on the 12th. I went up to the trenches with some more fellows last night. We got back at 4.30 in the morning. The Kaiser says the war will be over in two months, and there will be no winter campaign. I hope it's right. I saw Captain O'Flynn about two weeks ago. He is looking well. I ran across one of the Tuite fellows the other day at the Engineer's. I had a long talk with him. No, I never got the box you sent me in January. The only thing I need is writing paper and envelopes. Tell Dad that I saw a piece in the High School Elevator about him. Tell Hunter I got his letter and I thank him for it. I guess I have told you all the news for this time. Love to all. Answer soon. I remain, your son,

RAY.

CAPT. HARRY F. ALFORD.

Mr. Walter Alford received a cablegram yesterday from his son, Capt. Harry F. Alford, stating that he had arrived at Alexandria, en route to the Dardanelles.

TWO NEW DIRECTORS FOR THE UNION BANK

E. W. H. Blake, of Toronto, and R. O. McCulloch, of Galt, Now Identified With Canadian Financial Institution.

The Union Bank of Canada, head office in this city, the president of which is John Galt, of Winnipeg, announces the election of two new directors. These directors will take the place of two gentlemen well-known in Canada, and for some years connected with the bank, who recently passed away, namely, E. E. A. DuVernet, K.C., of Toronto, and the late Hon. S. Barker, P.C., M. P., of Hamilton.

The two new directors are Edward William Hume Blake, B.A., of Toronto, and R. O. McCulloch, of Galt. Mr. Blake is a son of the late Hon. Edward Blake, of Toronto. Mr. Blake was called to the Ontario bar in 1888, but is not now in practice. He is identified with important interests in Toronto, where he has spent his life, and is well known to leading business men in all parts of Canada.

Mr. McCulloch, is a son of the late Hugh McCulloch, of Galt. He was admitted to the bar in 1888, and is in active practice as a barrister at Galt, Ont. He is secretary-treasurer of the Goldie, McCulloch Company of Galt, and has been prominent in all local affairs in that city. He was formerly president of the Galt Board of Trade, and chairman of the parks commission He is a member of the executive of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, with which he has been closely identified. In sport, Mr. McCulloch has taken much interest, especially in cricket, and some years ago published, with J. E. Hall, a volume entitled "Sixty years of Canadian Cricket."

The Union Bank has been many years very intimately bound up with the financial life of Western Canada. It has assets now exceeding $80,000,000, and it has many branches in all the western provinces, with an equally strong connection in the east, where the head office was for many years located.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

DEATH ROLL

JOHN A. LIDDELL

One of Hope's most highly respected residents passed away on Tuesday last in the person of John A. Liddell, after an illness of only two weeks. Mr. Liddell, who was in his sixty-first year, was born on the old homestead, Thurlow Township, near Belleville, now occupied by his brother, Mr. Charles Liddell, where nearly thirty years of his life were spent, then coming to his farm near Campbellcroft, where he died.

Mr. Liddell is survived by two brothers and four sisters; Robert, in Flint, Michigan; Charlie, in Belleville; Mrs. D. McKenzie, in Winnipeg; Mrs. Chas. Liddell, in Owen Sound; Mrs. E. Keirl, of Regina; and Mrs. Chas. Osland, of Campbellcroft. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church a Conservative in politics, and was for years conected with the L.O.L. No. 75, Perrytown, under whose direction the funeral took place to Providence cemetery.—Port Hope Guide.

ALGONQUIN PARK

Just the out-of-way sort of place is Algonquin Park, less than 200 miles north of Toronto, for a perfect rest and holiday. Two thousand feet above the level of the sea—the highest point in Ontario—the air is rare and pure. Splendid fishing, canoeing and boating. Good hotel accommodation at the Highland Inn; also at the long cabin camp hotels in Smoke Lake and Island Lakes. Through parlor car from Toronto to the park. Write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Grand Trunk Railway, Union Station, Toronto, for handsome illustrated pamphlet telling all about it.

War Notes

To cope with the task of repairing the boots of British soldiers at the front, a special boot repairers' company, limited at present to 200 men, is to be raised for work in the base workships.

Eton College boys have begun work in a munition factory. They are stoking frunaces and wheeling mud. They started in grey trousers and white cricketing shirts, but are now in overalls.

Fourteen local borough council clerks are making munitions at a St. Pancras factory, giving two hours each evening and Saturday afternoon to the work.

The London, Ont., City Hall staff decided to raise $1,000 among themselves for the purchase of a machine gun for the Canadian troops.

Three sons of Henry Hamelin of Aylmer, Que., are now at the front, and to-day the father and his remaining son, old enough to go, came to Ottawa and both enlisted in the 77th. This battalion will be recruited up to 1360 or 220 over the usual strength.

GERMANY'S LOST COLONIES.

The complete conquest of German South-West Africa by General Botha leaves Germany bereft of the whole of her colonial possessions except German East Africa. It is impossible to set out a debtor and creditor account, and say what, on balance, Germany got out of her colonies. What her deprivation of these possessions means goes far beyond the differences between what they cost her to keep up and what she derived from them in money, or even in trade or in imports of goods these colonies produce. They meant power, and she is being deprived of her power. Further, vast regions were in a state of development.

What was German South-West Africa covers an area of 450,000 square miles. Its annual trade has reached nearly £4,000,000, and with the additional development to be expected from the British genius for colonisation (as against the German lack of it) this will probably soon be much increased. Cotton cultivation has begun, viticulture, silk culture, and tobacco-growing are being tried. There are also experimental stations for agriculture, gardening, and forestry. The chief industry is pastoral, sheep, cattle, goats, horses, mules, asses, swine and camels being raised in large numbers. Copper, diamonds, gold, marble, asbestos, and graphite have been found. In 1912, 27,500 tons of copper ore were exported. The revenue of German South-West Africa in 1914 was estimated at £1,175,000, and the expenditure £2,017,000. The imports in 1912 were £1,624,944, and the exports £1,952,667. The chief exports were animal products, guano, and copper ore.

Togoland, which was seized by British and French forces on August 7 last year, lies between the Gold Coast Colony on the west and French Dahomey on the east. It has an area of 33,700 square miles, with a coast line of about thirty-two miles. Maize, yams, tapioca, ginger, and bananas are grown by the natives; oil-palms, caoutchouc, and dyewoods grow in the forests, and there are considerable plantations of palms, coffee, cocoa, kola, and manihot. There are experiments also in the growing of tobacco, rubber, and other goods. There is a considerable quantity of cattle, and there are good roads. The principal imports in 1913 were machinery £4,791, rice £1,549, sugar £7,569. The principal exports were cocoa £16,660, palm kernels £127,905, palm oil £25,900, cotton £29,101, rubber £18,029. The revenue of Togoland for 1913 was £204,823, and the expenditure £213,329.

The Cameroons have also gone. This territory lies between British Nigeria and the French Congo, and extends from the coast north-eastwards to the southern shore of Lake Chad. The area is 191,130 square miles, and the population 2,540,000. Cocoa, coffee, rubber, kola, palm oil, ivory, hardwood, ebony, and cattle are among the products, and gold and iron have been found. The revenue of the Cameroons for 1914 was £565,500, and the expenditure £863,000. Development was going forward. It will progress more rapidly soon.

Tsingtau, the strongly fortified Far Eastern outpost of German "world empire" fell on November 7. The area is about 200 square miles. There are thirty-three townships, and a population of about 192,000. The products are fruits, beans, ground nuts, and sweet potatoes. Silk culture, coal mining, briquette-making, brewing and soap-making are carried on. For the year 1914 the revenue was estimated at £403,600, and the expenditure £920,000.

In the Pacific Germany had a host of islands. They are all gone. Kaiser Wilhelm's Land (the northern section of New Guinea), with its areca and sago palms, bananas and ebony, its cocoa-palms and caoutchouc, its horses, cattle and goats, and its recent find of gold, is no longer true to its name. The Bismarck Archipelago, the Solomon Islands, all have passed from the possession of Germany during this war.

There still remains to Germany of her colonial empire German East Africa, and she may soon lost that. The chagrin and mortification of the Kaiser and his War Lords, as they see their colonies melting away, can well be imagined. The overweening ambition of Germany led her to seek to extend her empire and increase her colonies. She had long ago decided that the only possible way of achieving her object was by the force of might. So for forty years she prepared herself for "The Day" when she would be strong enough to enforce her wishes by the strength of her strong right arm. But alas! for her long-cherished hopes and ambitions! The British Navy has been her undoing. And now Germany finds herself, after a year's devastating war, almost entirely denuded of her colonies. This is the bright side of the war which Britons can dwell upon with extreme satisfaction at this particular time, for they know that but for the incomparable British Navy the Allies would not be in the position they are today.

CURRENT COMMENT

Turkish shopkeepers are forbidden to use newspapers on which the name Allah is printed. Does this apply to "Kaiser" also?

Germany's submarine triumphs will come to an end, one of these days when Norway runs out of merchant ships.

If it were not for the German press the continued existence of W. J. Bryan would hardly be realized these days.

A French manufacturer has been deported for life for selling perfume to Germans. He put the enemy on to his country's scent.

Sufficient evidence that Germany wants to quit and Britain doesn't is seen in the screaming of the Hearst press, which, for the first time in its disgraceful history, howls for peace.—Montreal Mail.

Declare cotton contraband, compensate the growers in the Southern States, inform the countries adjacent to Germany that they may import just as much as, and not a bale more, than they were importing before the war—and the problem is as nearly solved as it ever can be now.—London Daily Mail.

From a rather gay, somewhat dissipated, broad minded Bohemian Prince, Wilhelm II. had changed mysteriously into a stern, almost puritanical King, with no thought but for his house and empire. He had read the message, the instruction that was to fashion his destiny.—"The Secrets of the Hohenzollerns," by Dr. Graves.

As an instrument of terror the submarine is a tremendous success. As a means of destroying an enemy's commerce it has so far proved a total failure. The difference between the German and English figures of vessels destroyed may be due to the inclusion of trawlers by the Germans, and their exclusion by the English. If all trawlers were swept from the sea it would have no appreciable effect upon British resources.—Philadelphia Record.

To offset this enormous advantage (capture of Warsaw) there is naturally to be counted the price which it cost the conquerors. Grand Duke Nicholas has apparently extracted from his opponents the maximum of loss which could be inflicted with the ammunition at his disposal. He has maintained a deadly resistance for three weeks on a front of three hundred miles of massive operations. He has repeatedly repulsed frontal attacks by great numbers on strong positions. The cost to the Teutons in men has not yet been reckoned. It may well exceed 300,000.—New York Evening Sun.

Now that the Kaiser says that his conscience is clear and that he did not will the war, it is in order to wonder who the guilty party was. Certainly, Great Britain, still unprepared after a year's hostilities, can hardly be accused, and France and Russia, who are not much better off, can make the same plea. Perhaps Servia started it in order to conquer Austria-Hungary in order to get a place in the sun and a window on the Adriatic. After the Kaiser's lucid statement no one, of course, would ever think of accusing Germany.—Philadelphia Record.

THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES.

Those "Huns"! Those terrible unspeakable, wonderful, exemplary "Huns"! England, proud, free England, now finds herself constrained to organize her industries, her science, according to the German pattern.

The mobilisation of industry has so far been a failure; the mobilisation of science will encounter even still greater obstacles. In the great technical discoveries and developments of the last few decades England has virtually had no part at all. The invention of the turbine constitutes the one and only British triumph.

The spirit, however, is not to be conjured up from the bowels of the earth; the hand of a statesman cannot create the inventive faculty. British industry as a whole would have to unlearn; entirely new methods would have to be instituted before the results could compensate for the trouble. To bring this about the new compulsion Bill even will not suffice.

No, English "cousins," it will not do. There is nothing for it but to await the arrival on your shores of the German hosts. They will prepare the way for the German teachers without whose guidance you will be lost in the jungle of your own colossal ignorance.—Neueste Nachrichten.

SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Vancouver News Papers Interview Veteran Statesman

A VETERAN.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who was one of the speakers at the open air meetings yesterday, is not only physically young for a man of ninety-two, but he has the enthusiasm and hopefulness usually attributed to youth. He concerns himself still with the future rather than with the past. If Sir Mackenzie had gone to the war he could have been claimed as British born. He is in fact an excellent Canadian, though he has only lived in this country eighty-two years. Still an active journalist Sir Mackenzie could prove that he began work as a newspaper man more than eighty years ago, and has carried on these activities ever since, except for an intermission of eighteen years in which he held office as a Cabinet Minister, and part of the time as Premier. His political career includes a number of years of campaigning before he reached Parliament, twenty-six years in the House of Commons, and twenty-two years in the Senate. For three years he led the Senate and for ten the Opposition in that chamber. Colonel Sir Mackenzie Bowell is no honorary colonel. He saw service in the field at the time of the Fenian Raid, and was long connected with the militia. The veteran who in adverse circumstances never despaired of his country. Two of the three former Premiers now living are ninety-two and ninety-four years of age. Germany will never be able to win so many battles as to make either of them despair of the British Empire.—Vancouver News-Advertiser.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, former Premier of the Dominion, statesman and journalist, is in Vancouver. He is 92 years of age and is known as "the Grand Old Man of Canada." In spite of his years he is a very alert person, and vigorous, too. He is a small man in stature, but he has a face and countenance which impress one as belonging to a man of great stature and powerful physique. He has a bright eye. His head and beard are snowy white. Half a century ago Canada was just beginning to obtain a growth as a nation and it was in those days that Sir Mackenzie began his great career. No for two years has Sir Mackenzie been West, but he was West before a lot of the residents of Vancouver began to appreciate what the West was, or what much of anything was.

Sir Mackenzie has his own opinions about the war. He does not think it will hurt Canada in the long run. He does not believe it will end quickly. At first there were those who thought the war would be over quickly, but Sir Mackenzie did not think so.

"Canada is doing her part nobly," said Sir Mackenzie. "Just now there is no party, no factions and we are all together."

Sir Mackenzie will spend several days here visiting his son, Mr. J. M. Bowell, of Point Grey, and some of his old-time friends. Sir Mackenzie's arrival was fortunate to be on Consecration Day and he was the most interesting personality at the Cambie street exercises.—Vancouver Sun.

Blinded Soldiers at St. Dunstan's

Mat for the Queen Made by Two of them

When the Queen visited the blinded soldiers and sailors at St. Dunstan's, the rapid progress made by the men who were learning mat-making so interested her Majesty that she ordered a door-mat.

This mat has been made by two of the men, and its receipt was acknowledged to the Blinded Soldiers' and Sailors' Care Committee in the following letter:—

Buckingham Palace.

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I have submitted the mat to the Queen, and her Majesty desires me to say that she considers it very well made, and that it does credit to the two blinded soldiers who have recently been instructed in the trade of mat-making.—Yours sincerely,

E. W. Wallington.

The excellent work of the mat-makers is fully equalled by that of the men engaged in the other industries which are taught at St. Dunstan's. Perfectly made baskets of many different designs are turned out with surprising speed and dexterity. Several of the men who first started to learn boot-repairing can sole and heel a pair of boots in a manner which leaves nothing to be desired.

The combination of boot-repairing and mat-making is a home industry which offers excellent opportunities to the blind worker. In boot repairing the difficulty of marketing goods which are made does not exist. When work becomes slack it is a pleasant change to make a few mats, for which there is always a good demand.

The carpentry class consists chiefly of men who are learning poultry keeping and market gardening, and wish to be able to make hen-coops and do their own repairs. Several men display a marked aptitude for joinery, and turn out beautifully finished picture frames, trays, and other readily saleable articles.

Nearly all these newly blinded men are rapidly becoming expert Braille readers and writers. One of them has just passed the test of the National Institute for the Blind, which enables him to claim the possession of a perfect knowledge of Braille. More than a dozen men have already passed the typewriting test, which means that they have typed a complete follio of straightforward matter and also a complicated business letter at a good rate of speed without a mistake.

Rowing and swimming are becoming increasingly popular. Several men who had never been in a boat before they came to St. Dunstan's are now expert oarsmen, and others who could not swim while they were in possession of their sight are now at home in the water.

An annex to St. Dunstan's has recently been opened for the accommodation of near relatives of men whose homes are in different parts of the country. They are invited to spend a few days at a time near their husbands, sons, or brothers free of cost.

Contributions are invited for the purpose of meeting these expenses, for providing typewriters and other expencost of many things provided for the blinded soldier and sailor which do not come within the ordinary expenditure of a home. Gifts of fruit and flowers are also welcomed. Cheques should be sent to the secretary of the Blinded Soldiers' and Sailors' Care Committee, St. Dunstan's, Regent's Park, N.W.

Specific is Found for Spinal Meningitis

Dr. Bull of Sydney Says That Eucalyptus Will Destroy the Germ

MELBOURNE, Australia, Aug. 12.—The discovery of a specific for cerebro-spinal meningitis was anounced to day by Dr. Richard Bull, Director of the Bacteriological Laboratory of the University of Melbourne. Dr. Bull stated that eucalyptus would destroy the germ.

The treatment of cerebro-spinal meningitis has long presented a serious problem for medical science. Up to a comparatively short time ago it may be said that there was no effective treatment for this disease, known popularly as "spotted fever" or "the black death."

The medicinal properties of the oil obtained from leaves of the eucalyptus tree have long been recognized. It has been used in treatment of microbic diseases of the lungs and bronchi and employed as an antiseptic.

THINK THEY HAVE FOUND THE MISSING PROFESSOR LAVELL

SAN JOSE, Cal., Aug. 12.—The police awaited word to-day from New York in the hope of establishing the identity of an aphasia victim thought to be Prof. Cecil F. Lavell, formerly of Columbia University, who disappeared on Nov. 21, 1913, while travelling to Hamilton, Ont.

The unknown man applied to the authorities here ten days ago for assistance in locating his relatives. The only thing he knew was his wife's maiden name, which he said was Lucille F. Widow.

The man's description was said by the police to tally closely with that of the missing college professor and Lavell's relatives were communicated with.

NOT IDENTIFIED

KINGSTON, Aug. 12—G. Y. Chown, brother-in-law of Prof. Cecil Lavell, has been besieged with telegrams from numerous places asking him as to information regarding the possibility of the man detained at San Jose, Cal., being the missing professor. Mr. Chown still thinks the man held is not Prof. Lavell. One of the telegrams he received came from Lewiston, Maine, at which place the missing professor was thought to have been seen some time after his disappearance.

Mrs. Lavell is in Toronto and although she is still clinging to the fond hope that her husband will turn up, she does not regard the latest clue as very encouraging. She is, however, in touch with the San Jose authorities and will notify Mr. Chown should anything develop.

Prof. Lavell disappeared in Hamilton more than two years ago. A boat which he had rented and a coat which he had worn were found floating in the bay near the Desjardines Canal. He was evidently suffering from some mental trouble, as he visited Mons. Mahony, St. Mary's Cathedral, and told him to phone the International Hotel in the evening to inquire if he returned. It is stated, Prof. Lavell suffered a similar experience two years previous to his disappearance when he came to Kingston but could not explain how he had reached here.

During the search for him in Hamilton his devoted wife walked the streets continually with a photo of her missing husband, appealing to passers-by for any possible clue which might assist her in solving his mysterious disappearance.

The reward of $500 offered for information regarding the missing man is still valid.

FIT OUT FOR TROPICS

This Was the Order to the Queen's Hospital Before Moving to the Dardanelles

Queen's Stationary Hospital which went overseas at same time as the 21st Battalion received orders on July 26th to get an issue of clothing suitable for a tropical climate was the information received in letters which arrived on Monday afternoon.

The Kingston officer writing home stated that they sent up to London for a military tailor to come down at once as they expected to leave any minute for the Dardanelles. The orders to leave for the Dardanelles must have arrived a few days latter as the unit left on August 1st.

One officer writing home states that some of the men were very anxious to go to France but the majority of the unit appreciated the act that the war office saw fit to send them to the Dardanelles.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

Marriage by Movie

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Josh Robbins and Mahulda Jencks were courting Saturday afternoon when there was a rap at the door, and, the summons being answered by Mahulda, she saw a man with a camera.

"Beg pardon," said the man. "I am working for a film company. I have a number of one reel scenarios, and I am traveling through the country putting them into films, the parts being taken by the persons in the places where I locate the plays. I want a young man and a girl to take the part of a pair of lovers. Can you accommodate me?"

When this was put into language that she could understand she went in to interview Josh on the subject. He had been trying for months to screw up his courage to propose to Mahulda, but thus far had failed. The idea of posing as a lover for a movie took him flat aback, but Mahulda was pleased.

The play was one of rustic simplicity, needing only Josh, Mahulda, her mother, her little brothers and sisters and a dog. It was not long before the machinery attached to the camera was buzzing, and Josh and Mahulda, standing on opposite sides of the gate, were being photographed for the first scene. One of the film men stood by telling them just what to do. He directed Josh to try to feel like a lover, talk like a lover and act like a lover. Mahulda he instructed to draw continually nearer to Josh until her lips were very near his.

When the two pairs of lips were but a couple of inches apart the instructor intended to keep them there for awhile for expectancy, but Josh could not stand so flagrant a temptation and brought on a climax too soon. The result was that it all had to be done over again. This time Josh didn't do any better than before, and the photographer excused him from another attempt, though Josh was quite willing and said he thought he could "git the hang of it after awhile."

After several unimportant scenes had been filmed Josh and Mahulda were seated on a bench just outside the kitchen door, stealing love passages in which kisses predominated. The children were playing about them, and the camera party came in when they were not looking. The last of this scene picture showed Mahulda's mother stealing upon the couple to satisfy herself that the engagement was about to take place.

Then Josh was pictured mounted and about to ride away somewhere. Before leaving he bent down and took another kiss. He rode down the turnpike only a short distance, and when he returned one of the film party was sitting by Mahulda, the two being photographed in a love passage. Josh was told to ride into the field of view, speak a few angry words and ride away in high dudgeon. But so angry was he at seeing a man in his place beside his girl that he threw himself from his horse and, seizing his dramatic rival by the collar, hustled him away, the latter part of the film showing his boot applied to the film man's person.

The picture men, far from being angry at this, were delighted, declaring that it would make a great hit. Josh, having vented his ire satisfactorily, was ready to make up with Mahulda, who reminded him that it was all make believe, and the reconciliation was performed to the perfect satisfaction of the film men. A scene was then introduced wherein Josh's dramatic rival was seen lurking about the place. Josh from the house let go Watch, the four legged protector of the farm, who made a bee line for the intruder, the latter making for the gate. There was no time to open it, and the man jumped over it, leaving the seat of his trousers between Watch's teeth.

The final scene was a wedding between Josh and Mahulda. The bride was bound to have some sort of wedding outfit, and her mother got out her own bridal dress and veil, which her daughter put on. Then one of the film men tied a white handkerchief about his neck to represent a clergyman, and the couple stood before him. The children were grouped about, looking up at them with childish curiosity, and by this time a number of neighbors, having collected to see what was going on, were placed at the door and windows. The ceremony having been performed, the make believe clergyman bent forward to kiss the bride, but Josh interposed his horny hand and took the kiss himself.

This ended the play. The film men thanked the company for their services and, gathering up their traps, took their departure. As soon as they had gone Josh said:

"Take off them things, Mahulda, and come right along home with me."

"Not much," replied Mahulda.

"Why, ain't we married?"

"Married! Why, that was only make believe for the men to photograph."

"Well, I'll be darned! How long 'll it take for us to be married reely?"

"Married! We ain't engaged yet."

"Great Scott! How long 'll it take to be engaged?"

"I haven't been asked yet."

"Look-a yere, Mahulda, yer asked. Is it 'Yes' or 'No'?"

"Yes."

"We're engaged. Some one telephone for a parson."

A parson was summoned, the pair were married, and Mahulda went to her husband's home with him.

BETTER STRAWBERRIES

EXPERIMENTS ARE BEING MADE TO IMPROVE NATIVE FRUITS.

Gooseberries and Tomatoes Are Also the Subject of Extensive Experiments at Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph—Operations So Far Have Yielded Hardy Plants and Fine Flavored Fruit.

To get a strawberry with the size and flavor of the English berry, together with the vigor and productiveness of the native varieties, is the aim of the horticultural staff of the O. A. C., Guelph. This is no easy task. Three years' work has already been spent, and it will be as many more years before the fruit will be on the market, says Gordon Furrow in the Toronto Globe.

In the spring of 1912 a piece of fairly level ground was selected on the college farm. The soil was not the most suitable, a sort of red clay, but was the best available. Here single plants were set out four feet apart each way. In 1913 more plants were added till a total of over 5,000 were in the experiment and two acres of ground was covered. Of these 5,000 only a few dozen were standard varieties, all the others being seedlings from crosses, mostly between American and the hardiest English varieties.

The plots were carefully cultivated both ways. The spring after they were set out the plantation was inspected to compare how the individual plants came through the winter. Only a very small percentage, less than one, was killed out, though some of the English varieties were seriously set back.

This summer, during the fruiting season, the patch has been constantly watched. Out of the total number about 600 plants have been marked as worthy of further experiment. Runners from the latter will be taken next spring and set out in a new patch. The present plots will be given another trial next season, and any that have been overlooked this summer will have another chance.

In judging which were the best of the new varieties the following points were taken into consideration: A large berry of good size and shape, fairly sweet and of good flavor. The seeds should not be too prominent and the calyx small. Another important point was the coloring. A deep red skin and a dark flesh of the same color, with fine texture. The fruit must be firm and ripe all over. The plants selected must be vigorous, hardy, disease-resisting, and very productive.

For a domestic variety, that is, a strawberry patch for family use, Prof. Crow thought a rather sweet berry of medium size would be desirable. For commercial type, however, hardiness, productiveness, and size were very important.

Most of the varieties are rather late, but where it is impossible to raise very early fruit on account of the frosts, there is more profit in the berries that come on the market towards the end of the season.

When visiting these experimental plots last week I found the average daily yield to be about 20 to 25 crates, with the season just about half over. When one takes into consideration the fact that these plots are nearly all of different varieties this is a fairly good yield.

Another very interesting experiment is being carried on by the same department. This is plant breeding work in connection with apples.

A few years ago several varieties of apples were cross-pollenated. To do this several trees were selected before the blossoms burst. A few blossoms of each tree were covered with mosquito netting. This kept the bees and other insects out. Pollen was taken from the blossoms of one tree and mixed with the pollen on the blossoms of the tree which was to be crossed with the first one. The resulting seed was a true cross of the varieties, and not, as in a natural case, a mixture of several unknown trees.

The seeds were planted in boxes and set out when they were a few inches high. After weeding out the weaklings, and as soon as shoots are over a foot high, scions will be taken from them and grafted. This is a "short-cut" in getting results. The young trees will also be allowed to grow. The principal crosses are: McIntosh and Spy, Wealthy and McIntosh, and Wealthy and Wagner. Similar experiments are also being conducted with pears. The results will not be known for a few years yet.

Some seedlings of pears and apples were sent over from Russia. These came from high altitudes in the Caucasus Mountains, and are said to be the hardiest known apples of good quality, as hardy as the Pyrus Baccata and much superior to it. From these a variety suitable for New Ontario may be produced.

Eighteen of the best English varieties of gooseberries are being experimented with, the principal object being to produce a berry with the native vigor and hardiness together with the English size and quality.

Seedlings from the crosses of some of the best varieties of hothouse tomatoes and the most popular outdoor kinds are being grown. The types used were Industry and Hipper crossed with the outdoor Grand Rapids. The ordinary field tomato is large, does not ripen evenly, cracks, and is usually somewhat hollow. The result of this cross is likely to be a fairly early, medium-size fruit, red all over and with no cracking. This will eliminate the great waste in the canning tomato.

The horticultural staff is also working to produce the best all-round varieties of rhubarb and asparagus.

The results of these many experiments should have a good effect on Canadian horticulture.

IN THE ARCTIC ICE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

We were whaling in the Arctic sea in the Scotch bark Jean. No ship ever had worse luck. When we had been out for four months we had to buy a barrel of oil to keep our lamps going.

One afternoon as we had a half cut whale on each side of us a gale sprang up, a heavy snowstorm came on, and in less than an hour we had to let go our prizes and look sharply after the bark.

Morning came again, and it brought in wind, while the cold was intense.

"Well, boys, it looks very serious to me, and I expect you had better prepare to winter this side of Dundee," said the captain.

That settled it with us. We turned to and began to calk and batten to keep out the cold, and in a couple of days we were as ready as we could be.

For the next month our life was like that so often described in books. Then a sudden and terrible interruption came. The bark began to heave out. The first movement came about 10 o'clock in the forenoon and filled everybody with dire alarm. After five minutes she heaved again, lifting right out of the solid field, with great cakes clinging to her, as if machinery were at work. As she lifted she canted to starboard, and at noon her decks were at an angle of 45 degrees. The carpenter, who had a little plan of his own, reported that the heave had shattered several planks in her bottom and that she would fill if she were cradled back. She took one more heave, canting over until almost on her beam ends, and then we got our clothing, bedding, provisions, a compass and four boats and at midnight headed away in four gangs for Smith's bay, each gang having a boat, which was dragged and lifted over the ice.

We had made forty miles or more and were strung out on the pack for a mile or so when the two of us who were in advance to pick the route turned a large hummock or hill of ice to find ourselves bumping up against a three masted ship. We soon found her to be the Bristol ship Endurance, a whaler, of course, and two-thirds full of blubber and oil. She had a slight list to port, and after looking her over the officers said she had heaved out, the same as our bark, but had settled back again. She had been abandoned in a hurry, as there were many evidences, but an inspection showed plenty of provisions aboard and proved her perfectly sound.

We had been aboard the Endurance about a month when the carpenter fell sick. In his case it was pure homesickness and nothing else. I was appointed to nurse the carpenter, and when he had been brought very low and knew that he must go he told me a secret. He said he had made a false report to the captain about the damage to the ship's bottom on purpose to induce him to abandon her and start for land.

I told the captain, and he at once fitted out an expedition to go back and look up the bark. The first mate and five men composed the party, and after being gone a week, during which time the weather was full of tempest, snow and sleet, they returned from the west and blundered right up against us before they saw the ship. Their compass had been broken, and they had been lost for six days on that fearful waste of ice.

No further efforts were made. Day by day the sun lasted a little longer, giving us more of the blessed daylight, and at last a gale came to break up the great field and showed us streaks of open water. When we were finally clear of the icy bed which had held the ship we headed for Point Barron, sometimes gaining and sometimes losing ground. One day, I remember, we made twenty miles to the south; but on the very next a change of wind packed the ice and drifted us that far back to the north. We were slowly working down toward the strait, however, when one day at noon a snow squall lasting about two hours drove us into a channel running southwest. We had scarcely entered it before we caught sight of a bark coming down a channel from the north and not over a mile to the west of us. Twenty voices at once cried out that the stranger was our old craft, and as we neared each other, running on the long lines of a triangle, everybody felt sure of it. We also noticed the crew on the bark, but it was only when the two craft were within a stone's throw of each other that matters were fully explained.

Who do you suppose the strange men were? None others than the crew of the Endurance. They had our bark and we had their bark. A swap had been made of craft. Their ship had heaved up about the same time ours did, and they had abandoned her for the same reason. Instead of trying to make the land they had sought to find a brig which had been sighted to the north of them. This vessel was a myth or some foreign vessel which had got safely out and could not be traced. In hunting for her they came across our bark. Three days only had passed, and yet she had canted back to an even keel. They had boarded her, taken full possession and then worked her out on the breakup. We changed crews and resumed the voyage, and both ships entered the port of Nuweek together, whence, later on, both resumed the business of whaling. It was called even up all around, and neither was debtor nor creditor.

CHAPTER XXV.

Mattie's New Dress.

The remainder of the week passed harmlessly and without any special event to mark it, and, thanks to Nan's skilful management and Phillis' pride there were no further 'contretemps' to shock Mrs. Challoner's sense of propriety. The work progressed with astonishing rapidity; in the mornings the young dressmakers were sufficiently brisk and full of zeal, and in the afternoons, when their energies flagged and their fingers grew weary, Dulce would sing over her task, or Mrs. Challoner would read to them for the hour together; but, notwithstanding the interest of the tale, there was always great alacrity manifested when the tea-bell gave them excuse for putting their work away.

On one or two evenings they gardened, and Mrs. Challoner sat under the mulberry tree and watched them; on another occasion they took a long country walk, and lost themselves, and came back merry and tired, and laden with primrose-roots and ferns; they had met no one, except a stray laborer,—had seen glow-worms, picked wild flowers, and declared themselves mightily refreshed. One evening Phillis, who was not to be repressed, contrived a new amusement.

"Life is either a mill-pond or a whirlpool," she said, rather sententiously: "we have been stagnant for three days, and I begin to feel flat. Races are tabooed; besides, we cannot always leave mother alone. I propose we got out in the garden and have a game of battledore and shuttlecock; for this had been a winter pastime with them at the cottage.

Nan, who was always rather soberminded now, demurred to this. She would have preferred gardening a little, or sitting quietly with her mother under the mulberry-tree; but Phillis, who was in a wild mood, overruled all her objections, and by and by the battle began, and the shuttlecocks flew through the air.

The week's work was finished, and the three dresses lay in their wrappers, waiting for Dorothy to convey them to their several owners. Nan who was really an 'artiste' at heart, had called her mother proudly into the room to admire the result of their labors. Mrs. Challoner was far too accustomed to her daughter's skilfulness to testify any surprise, but she at once pronounced Miss Drummond's dress the 'chef-d'aeuvre.' Nan's taste was faultless; and the trimmings she had selected harmonized so well with the soft tints of the silk.

"They are all very nice; and Mrs. Trimmings will be charmed with her blue silk," observed Mrs. Challoner, trying to throw a little interest into her voice and to suppress a sight; and then she helped Nan to adjust the wrappers, and to pin the neatly-written bills inside each.

"I am sure that is business-like," said Nan, with a satisified nod, for she never could do anything by halves and she was so interested in her work that she would have been heart-broken if she thought one of the dresses would be a misfit; and then it was that Phillis, who had been watching very closely, brightened up and proposed a game.

It was a very pretty sight, the mother thought, as she followed her girls' movements; the young figures swayed so gracefully as they skimmed hither and thither over the lawn with light butterfly movements, the three eager faces upturned in the evening light, their heads held well back.

"Two hundred, two hundred and one, two hundred and two—don't let it drop, Dulce!" panted Phillis, breathtlessly.

"Oh, my darlings, don't tire yourselves!" exclaimed Mrs. Challoner, as her eyes folowed the white flutter of the shuttlecocks.

This was the picture that Mr. Drummond surveyed. Dorothy, who was just starting on her round, and was in no mood for her errand, had admitted him somewhat churlishly.

"Yes, the mistress and the young ladies were in; and would he step into the parlor, as her hands were full?"

"Oh, yes, I know the way," Mr. Drummond had returned, quite undaunted by the old woman's sour looks.

But the parlor was empty, save for Laddie, who had been shut up there not to spoil sport, and who was whining most piteously to be let out. He saluted Archie with a joyous bark, and commenced licking his boots and wagging his tail with mute petition to be released from this durance vile.

Archie patted and fondled him, for he was good to all dumb creatures.

"Poor little fellow! I wonder why they have shut you up here?" he said, and then he took him up in his arms, and stepped to the window to reconnoitre.

And then he stood and looked, perfectly fascinated by the novel sight. His sisters played battledore and shuttlecock in the school-room sometimes, or out in the passage on a winter's afternoon. He had once caught Susie and Clara at it, and had laughed at them in no measured terms for indulging in such a babyish game. "I should have thought Dottie might have played at that," he had said, rather contemptuously. "I suppose you indulge in skipping-ropes sometimes." And the poor girls had paused in their game, feeling ashamed of themselves. Archie would think them such hoydens.

He remembered his reprimand with with a strange feeling of compunction as he stood by the window trying vainly to elude Laddie's caresses. What a shame of him to have spoiled those poor children's games with a sneer, when they had so little fun in their lives! and yet, as he recalled Clara's clumsy gestures and Susie's short-sighted attempts, he was obliged to confess that battledore and shuttlecock wore a different aspect now. Could anything surpass Phillis' swift-handed movements brisk, graceful, alert or Nan's attitude, as she sustained the duel? Dulce, who seemed doging in between them in a most eccentric way, had her hair loose as usual, curling in brown lengths about her shoulders. She held it with one hand, as she poised her battledore with the other. This time Archie thought of Nausicaa and her maidens tossing the ball beside the river, after washing the wedding garments. Was it in this way the young dressmakers disported themselves during the evenings?

It was Phillis who first discovered the intruder. The shuttlecocks had become entangled, and fallen to the ground. As she stopped to pick them up, her quick eyes detected a coat-sleeve at the window; and an indefinable instinct, for she could not see his face, made her call out,—

"Mother, Mr. Drummond is in the parlor. Do go to him, while Dulce puts up her hair." And then she said, severely, "I always tell you not to wear your hair like that, Dulce. Look at Nan and me; we are quite unruffled; but yours is always coming down. If you have pretty hair, you need not call people's attention to it in this way." At which speech Dulce tossed her head and ran away, too much offended to answer.

When Archie saw Mrs. Challoner crossing the lawn with the gait of a queen, he knew he was discovered; so he opened the window, and stepped out in the coolest possible way.

I seem always spoiling sport," he said, with a mischievous glance at Phillis, which she received with outward coolness and an inward twinge. "Bravo, Atalanta!" sounded in her ears again. "Your maid invited me in; but I did not care to disturb you."

"I am glad you did not open the window before," returned Nan, speaking with that directness and fine simplicity that always put things to rights at once; "it would have startled us before wes got to the five hundred, and then Phillis would have been disappointed. Mother, shall we bring out some more chairs instead of going into the parlor? It is so much pleasanter out here.' And as Mrs. Challoner assented they were soon comfortably established on the tiny lawn; and Archie, very much at his ease, and feeling himself unaccountably happy, proceeded to deliver some trifling message from his sister, that was his ostensible reason for his intrusion.

'Why does she not deliver her messages herself?" thought Phillis; but she kept this remark to herself. Only, that evening she watched the young clergyman a little closely, as though he puzzled her. Phillis was the man of the family; and it was she who always stood upon guard if Nan or Dulce needed a sentinel. She was beginning to think Mr. Drummond came very often to see them, considering their short acquaintance. If it were Miss Mattie, now, who ran in and out with little offerings of flowers and fruit in a nice neighborly fashion! But for this very dignified young man to burden himself with these slight feminine messages—a question about new-laid eggs, which even Nan had forgotten.

Phillis was quite glad when her mother said,—

"You ought to have brought your sister, Mr. Drummond; she must be so dull alone," forgetting all about the dressmaking, poor soul! but Phillis remembered it a moment afterwards, with a rush of bitter feeling.

Perhaps, after all, that was why he came in so often, because he was so sorry for them, and wished to help them, as he said. A clergyman has more privileges than other men; perhaps she was wrong to suspect him. He might not wish his sister to visit them, except in a purely business-like way; but with him it was different. Most likely he had tea with Mrs. Trimmings sometimes, just to show he wasn't proud; he might even sit and chat with Mrs. Squails, and not feel compromised in the least. Oh, yes! how stupid she was to think he admired Nan, because she had intercepted a certain glance! That was her mania, thinking every one must be after Nan. Things were different now.

Of course he would be their only link with civilized society,—the only cultivated mind with which they could hold verse; and here Phillis ceased to curl her lip, and her gray eyes took a sombre shade, and she sighed so audibly that Archie broke off an interesting discussion on last Commemoration, and looked at her in unfeigned surprise.

To be Continued.

Woman's World

A Woman Who Believes In Universal Suffrage.

MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT.

Excerpts of an address delivered by Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont at the southern states woman suffrage conference held in Chattanooga, Tenn., November of 1914 are given below. Mrs. Belmont spoke to the southern audience as a southern woman, having been born in Alabama. She is the granddaughter of General Robert Desha of Tennessee, member of congress during the administration of Andrew Jackson.

Mrs. Belmont said in part:

Modern society is undergoing a decided revolution in woman's affairs which a few years ago would have been declared impossible. Each day brings fresh evidence of woman's ability to cope with world problems and effect reforms. We are all familiar with the doleful predictions made from time to time regarding the danger of permitting women to interest themselves in matters pertaining to the public welfare. But we have countless examples of efficient women devoting their talents to the common good, and the world not only survives the shock, but constantly demands more and more of their time and effort. Society has come to recognize the advantages derived from their co-operation, and welcomes the enormous benefits accuring therefrom.

Not long ago the distinguished editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, familiarly known as Colonel Watterson, gave an interview to a New York newspaper, in which he said: "Man has no inalienable rights which woman has not, but God and nature have given her a fixed place which she cannot change." Now, as a matter of fact, the "fixed place," which, according to tradition, God and nature gave woman, was in the garden of Eden, without any clothes, any roof over her head, any cooking stove, or any cradle to rock her baby in. If it had been "impossible for her to change it" all of us would be roaming around in the forest at the present day.

Men simply get themselves mixed up with God and nature, and the "fixed place" for women which they have in mind is one that man himself assigned to her some time after Adam had received his first knowledge through her efforts.

Personally, I plead guilty to so strong a desire for the poplitical emancipation of women that I am not at all particular as to how it shall be granted. I have sworn allegiance to the national amendment for woman suffrage, while the southern states woman suffrage conference, of which I am proud to be a member, holds rigidly to the principle of state rights. As a southerner I thoroughly understand the problems which create this attitude, and if that method proves effective I shall gratefully accept the results. In this respect I feel toward woman suffrage as I do about the cotton industry—both should have the undivided support of the whole United States.

Our critics, like those of all times and all places, distort our motives and denounce our efforts, but I insist that woman suffrage is a spiritual movement, for we seek the uplift of the whole dependence, believing that "where the human race is imbued with a desire to promote the principles of self respect and the spirit of the Lord, there is liberty."

Taking Precaution.

Every precaution is being taken at Sarnia to catch any persons who might try to damage any buildings or plants working on shells for the army. An armed guard is in waiting at the Armories to be rushed to any part of the city, if needed, in an auto which waits outside. No trouble is expected, but the authorities are taking no chances. A few nights ago some unknown parties cut off the electric light from one of the shell manufacturing plants.

SUBMITTED RESIGNATION

It is understood that Constable Charles Thompson, one of the most efficient members of the local police force, has tendered his resignation, as he is going to the front. Constable Thompson has already served three years with heavy artillery at Kingston, and as he is a finely-built man, will no doubt be a valuable acquisition to our forces. The Intelligencer wish him every success.

SWAMP FEVER

The Marmora Herald in commenting on the prevalence of swamp fever in the vicinity of Oak Lake and Cordova, says: Dr. Lumsden, V.S., states that he has had about twenty cases in the last year. The disease is a contagious one, and there are dangers of it assuming serious proportions. The chief government inspector was in Marmora last week and visited a couple of cases with Dr. Lumsden. He advised isolating the affected animals, but there is no legislation regulating the disease."

CAMPBELFORD'S OLDEST RESIDENT

THIN FOLKS WHO WOULD BE FAT

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More a Physician's Advice

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

I'd certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds and stay that way, declares every excessively thin man or woman. Such a result is not impossible, despite past failures. Thin people are victims of mal-nutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, all the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal amount of fat the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can best be accomplished by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a scientific combination of six of the best strength-giving fat-producing elements known to the medical profession. Taken with meals, it mixes with the food and turns the sugars and starches into rich, ripe nourishment for the tissues and blood and its rapid effect is remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by J. S. McKeown and other good druggists verywhere and every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in the treatment of nervous digestion and general stomach disorders, it should not, owing to its remarkable flesh producing effect, be used by those who are not willing to increase their weight ten pounds or more.

PATRIOTIC PETERBORO

120 Men Enlist in One Week for Overseas Service

Prof. L. W. Mulloy reports that in one week the Peterboro branch of the Speakers' League secured the following results:

42 men enlisted for the 8th Regiment C. M. R., at Barriefield Camp.

49 infantrymen for the 59th and 77th Battalions.

25 men for overseas battery.

Several men in hospital for operations to make them physically fit.

In one week, therefore, Peterboro district has contributed 120 men for overseas service through the efforts of the League.

Peterboro has asked the Militia Department to allow it to form a local battalion to secure the necessary men in two months. The offer is made on condition that the Peterboro men be allowed to remain together in a battalion and not be drafted from time to time.

FOREST FIRES IN MANITOBA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

The Pas, Man., August 1.—Forest fires are causing heavy destruction of pine trees at Cumberland House and Beaver Lake. At Moose and Cedar lakes a wide area of timber land is raging for a width of ten miles. The fire is also burning along the right of way of the Hudson's Bay Railway, but no damage is feared to the railway.

Vancouver, B. C., August 11.—This city and New Westminster are under a pall of smoke, for the worst bush fires in the history of this territory are now burning. The only fatality so far is that of Walter J. Richardes, who was overcome while fighting fires and succumbed before he could be removed from the neighborhood of the fire where he fell. Two or three barns have been destroyed, although the actual damage otherwise has not been large.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Eight Belleville men, were visitors at Barriefield camp on Wednesday looking for some artillery unit to become members of. They were directed to Tete de Pont Barracks.

Yesterday was the birthday of Lieut.-Col. Munro, of the 8th C.M.R., and he was the recipient of many congratulations from all over. Col. Munro is a young and energetic cavalry officer who has won his way to his present command by hard work and ability. Since coming to camp he has made himself and his regiment very popular. He had a kind word, a pleasant smile, and a most genial manner towards all who deal with him.

Lieut.-Col. J. R. Munro gave the 8th Regiment, C.M.R., a lesson in what to do in case of a surprise attack, on Wednesday afternoon. About two o'clock bugles sounded at the Orderly tent the regimental alarm. The buglers of the different squadrons took it up and four minutes afterwards the regiment was on the parade ground. Within five minutes after the "call to arms" was sounded, even the Mounted Orderlies who had to saddle their horses, were ready for action. The squadron were then detailed to command positions around the camp. The test showed the men the necessity of getting ready for action in a very short while. Col. Munro is highly pleased with the way his men (even the recruits) acted, and commended them for their work.

"Not so bad for an old boy," smiled Sir Mackenzie Bowell as he stepped forward to greet the representative of The World.

A ravine dips down on the west side of the terraced gardens, which surround Mr. J. M. Bowell's residence at Point Grey. The veteran senator had just climbed up the bank from the ravine, where he had adventured to capture a stray but beautiful flowed. It was a stiff climb for a man approaching his ninety-third year, yet his breath was little shaken, and the words of his greeting came in eloquent evidence of robust health.

"A little more water would be beneficial. It's high up here and it gets a little dry," commented the hale old knight as he led the way to the spacious verandah that commands an admirable view of the bay, and the panorama of mountains beyond.

In spite of the fact that the senator had but a few hours before completed a train journey from Winnipeg, he appeared to be not in the least degree fatigued.

No Conscription.

"No," he replied to a question put by The World after some preliminary conversation. "I do not believe that it will be necessary. The chief impression that I had in my trip across Canada was the wonderful unanimity of sentiment and opinion in regard to the prosecution of this war. The Empire is being knit together by this great struggle in such fashion as, perhaps, it would not have been in less than fifty years of peace.

"Canadians are readily offering themselves in all parts of Canada. There is no East and West as far as this war is concerned," declared the knight. "In the west you are doing wonderfully, and it is the same in the east. The barbarous methods employed by the Germans are inspiring a feeling of hatred that is continually driving men to the colors

"Proportionately to our population, we have put as many men in the field as has any other part of the empire," continued Sir Mackenzie, who took occasion to remark that in spite of the criticism from some quarters, the achievement of Maj.-Gen. Hughes has been a wonderful one.

"I doubt," said the senator, "if any man in Canada could have done better."

Unprepared at Start.

"Canada, like England, was unprepared for this struggle," he continued. "Everything had to be done after the declaration of war. To any one who thinks at all, the progress made in so quick a time from a state of unpreparedness to the condition of affairs to-day has been simply amazing.

"In the prairie country the spirit shown by the people is surprisingly gratifying. In Winnipeg, where last week I addressed the Orange Grand Lodge of Manitoba, the enthusiasm in connection with the war was marvellous. A large number of women in khaki marched in one of the processions there. At Calgary they have 5,000 men under arms.

In speaking of Canada's unpreparedness at the outbreak of the war, Sir Mackenzie commented on the stand he had himself taken when a leader of the Conservative party in the senate a few years ago.

"I scented trouble when the British fleets were withdrawn to Channel and North Sea waters," said the senator. He added that he had advocated bigger appropriations for the militia consistently.

Crops Are Excellent.

The conversation drifted from the war to another subject, which in days of peace would be one of first instance.

"The magnificent crops throughout the west gladdened my heart," said Sir Mackenzie with enthusiasm. "They are so thoroughly good everywhere. There were only one or two small sections where the crops were not first class. It is the same thing in Ontario. I never saw the fields of grain there looking better."

Must Work on Farm.

The senator stated that he thought a good deal of so-called unemployment was caused through the refusal of men to go on the farms. This indisposition to get out in the country, he thought, was partly to be attributed to labor union principles. Men were accustomed to think that six and eight hours' constituted a days' work, and working on a farm from "morn to dewy eve" did not make a strong appeal to them.

"However desirable short hours of labor may be thought to be in the city, it is certain that work cannot be carried out that way on a farm," pronounced Sir Mackenzie.

"I see the German aeroplanes have been hovering over my native town in Suffolk," remarked the aged senator as The World's representative was taking his leave. "I'm a little too old to fight now. I did my volunteering at the time of the Fenian raid, but if the Germans start anything and I am anywhere near I shall do my little bit with pleasure."

The vigorous old statesman stepped nimbly to the stairs leading from the verandah to bid The World's representative "good morning."

The newspaperman looked back to see Sir Mackenzie with the flower he had plucked in the ravine still in his hand, standing erect and looking out upon the expanse of sea that shimmered in the noonday heat.

Post Discusses After-war Plan To Aid Records

Suggests Conference Between Overseas and Home Ministers on Colonization Scheme

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Apropos of the post-bellum colonization scheme for ex-soldiers, the Morning Post, in an editorial today, suggests that Bonar Law, the Colonial Secretary, should improve on the experiment made a century ago when the Government sent settlers to the eastern province of Cape Colony. That scheme, the Post adds, almost failed owing to the haphazard dumping of poor urban dwellers in savage, deserted territory, though the descendants of these British settlers have since saved the political situation.

The Post suggests a conference on the subject between the Overseas and home Ministers. Practical men should prepare the way, ground should be allotted, capital provided, and a social system devised. The scheme might be arranged by the colonial governments with the co-operation of the home government, or by private enterprise under state supervision, but any scheme should be on a business basis and not on philanthropic lines.

COSSACKS FIRED THE TOWN

Germans Were Unable To Extinguish The Flames

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—(By wireless to Sayville).—"The first real Russian, not Polish, town of some importance entered by the Germans was Vladimir-Bolynski," says an item given out today by the Overseas News Agency. "Retiring Cossacks set fire to the buildings. As the Cossacks galloped away German cavalry arrived at the other end of the town. The incoming troops tried to stop the fire, but with small success, and the central part of the city was entirely destroyed, the burned buildings including stores, restaurants and hotels. The suburbs and surrounding rural districts, the officers' residences, barracks, messes, schools, and churches were spared.

"The German cavalry commander immediately restored order and established a military and also a civil Government, the latter by appointing three administrative presidents, one of whom was a Pole, another a Russian and the third a Jew.

"At each false alarm at the return of the Russians the Jewish inhabitant fled in a great panic, replying to the Germans who tried to stop them: "I. the Russians return we shall be killed."

"The German general commanding next day appointed two additional presidents, one of whom was a Pole and the other a Jew. The fugitives gradually returned to their homes."

ALLOWED HIS LIBERTY

Frederick Shaw, a former employee of Rockwood Hospital, who was charged with the theft of $33, was allowed his freedom on suspended sentence. He cashed a cheque owned by a fellow employee, and took the money to Montreal with him, but as his case is rather a pathetic one, he was allowed his freedom. Prisoner was anxious to get to England, to see his sick wife.

ITALIAN ALPINE TROOPS DRIVE AUSTRIANS BACK

War Office Praises Bravery of Men Fighting in Glaciers of Alps at Height of 10,000 Feet

ROME, Aug. 13.—Via Paris, Aug. 13.—The effectiveness of Italian Alpine troops in repulsing two Austrian attempts to cross the frontier through passes of the Alps at an altitude of ten thousand feet is praised by the Italian war office in today's official statement The announcement says:

"In the steep, rugged zone of the Furva valley the enemy, who on the 4th had reconnoitered by patrols which were immediately driven back through the Vicz pass (10,000 feet high), delivered an attack on the night of the 9th across the Forno Glacier against our troops posted near the hotel of the same name, while another detachment advanced through the Cedevale pass (11,000 feet) against those of our troops who occupied Capana Cedez. The watchfulness of our Alpine troops who, nothwithstanding glaciers and high peaks are incessantly active, succeeded in frustrating this bolt double manoeuver, and the enemy was soon repulsed. He was then counter-attacked and forced to flee.

"In Cadore small encounters turning in our favor are reported in the high valleys of Ansier and Visdende. In one of these fights we took prisoner forty light infantrymen.

"Isolated infantry and artillery actions also took place in Carnia in the valley of the torrent of Fontebbana. An Austrian detachment trying to climb the Italian slope was attacked and put to flight.

"On the Carso plateau during the day of the 11th no event of special importance transpired. Only small skirmishes are reported."

For Forty Years Germany Prepared

Engineer Educated in Kaiser-land Tells How Shipbuilding was Developed

MONTREAL, Aug. 13.—That Germany has been preparing for war for forty years, is the opinion expressed by Mr. J. McCarthy, chief engineer of the Mohacsfield, now in this port. He is in a better position than most to judge of this, because when he was a lad of four his father took a position as foreman in a German shipbuilding plant at Bremen-haven, and three years later the family joined him. Most of Mr. McCarthy's education wasobtained at German schools, and part of his apprenticeship to his chosen calling was in that country. He speaks German as fluently as he does English, and knows from actual experience in the schools that Germans were being moulded to suit the militarist ambitions of the dominant caste.

"Every German takes it in with his mother's milk. They are a nation of soldiers, because it was so intended by the men having the chief say in what their education system should inculcate. My father used to say back in the late seventies and early eighties that there would be a terrible war some time in Europe, that he could see things shaping towards that end, and that he only hoped he would not live to see it."

Mr. McCarthy, sr., died some months before the war, but one of his sons had taken his place, having been trained to that end by his father. This son is now interned in Germany, with another brother who had a high managerial position in a shipbuilding firm. A recent letter asked Mr. McCarthy to send some bread to them, as they found it very difficult to get any food.

General Amnesty for Political Prisoners

German Military Authorities Set Them Free in Warsaw

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—(By wireless to Sayville).—Among items given out today by the Overseas News Agency for transmission were the following:

"The German military authorities, on the suggestion of the citizens committee of Warsaw, has declared a general amnesty of political prisoners there and set them free. Among them was the widely-known Russian labor leader, Meden.

"Semi-official warnings have been issued against over-speculation on the stock exchange.

"The Duchy of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha has increased the daily bread allowance to the inhabitants. The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger announces that a third cut in floor and bread prices is probable.

"War correspondents report that Warsaw was not damaged by the struggle around it, and that only the corn store houses in Praga were burned. Lublin likewise was only slightly damaged. Some factories in the barracks district were burned.

Expected Drive On Western Front Will Soon Begin

Before End of Month Enemy May Have to Withstand Terrific Blow

PARIS, Aug. 13.—"Don't worry about them; I'll start before they do."

This is reported, and generally believed here, to have been the answer of General Joffre to the questions of Lord Kitchener and the other persons at the recent conference in Calais when the matter of what would happen when the Germans turned their armies westward after the capture of Warsaw.

This view finds general acceptance in military circles here. Just where and when General Joffre will "start" no one pretends to know, but that he has every intention of "beating the Germans to the punch," to use the prize ring phrase no one doubts. Most persons in the best position to judge believe that before the end of the month the western front of the Germans will be called on to withstand a French blow beside which the drive at the lines north of Arras was a minor incident. The lull, which has been almost complete along the entire western front for more than a week, in the opinion of these observers, is merely the calm before the storm, during which General Joffre has been quietly gathering his forces, resting those need it, conditioning the whole army as a trainer conditions an athlete, assembling the immense quantities of ammunition required and biding his time for the blow.

GERMANS STRENGTHEN LINE.

Amsterdam, Aug. 13.—Preparations are being made by the Germans in west Flanders to meet another offensive movement by the British east of Ypres. Since the battle at Hooge, which resulted in extensive gains for the British, the Germans have been pouring heavy reinforcements into the region east of Ypres and north of that along the Yser. Not only infantry but great numbers of guns have been sent to the German front to strengthen the line.

Zeppelin Raid On British Coast

Six Persons Killed and Many are Injured—Towns' Names Not Given

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Official announcement was made to-day on an airship raid last night on the east coast of England.

The text of the announcement follows:

"Two Zeppelins visited the east coast last night, between 9.30 p.m. and 11.45 p.m., dropping incendiary and explosive bombs in various places, resulting in the following casualties: Killed 4 men, 2 women; injured, 3 men, 11 women, 9 children, all civilians. Fourteen houses were seriously damaged.

"The Zeppelins were engaged at some points, but succeeded in getting away from our aircraft patrols. One of the Zeppelins was probably damaged by the mobile anti-aircraft section.

Last night's raid of Zeppelins was the second this week. On Monday night Zeppelins flew over the English coast and with their bombs killed 14 persons and wounded 14 others.

These raid attackson England after an interval of several weeks. The last previous raid, with the exception of a minor attack on Harwich early in July was on June 15, when 16 persons were killed and 40 injured. In all there have been nearly a score of these attacks resulting in the death of more than 100 persons.

CROWN PRINCE AGAIN FAILS TO SMASH LINE

Pick of German Troops Have Been Repulsed by French at Verdun

PARIS, Aug. 13.—Crown Prince Frederick William's efforts to smash the French defence west of Verdun have again resulted in failure. The communique issued by the war office this afternoon announces another repulse for the Germans in their attacks in the Argonne.

Unofficial reports from the front state that the finest troops in the German army have been sent to reinforce the crown prince, and that he has been ordered to break through the French front at any cost.

The German attacks are being made with great violence both night and day.

ALLIES' SUCCESSES IN THE DARDANELLES

With Resumption of Operations on Extensive Scale They Take Important Positions Around Krithia—What the Turks Claim

LONDON, Aug. 13.—(Special.—An Athens despatch to The Daily Chronicle says:

"Operations on an extensive scale have been resumed on the Gallipoli Peninsula and the latest news is on the whole very favorable. The battle has been general in the region around Krithia.

"The allies, having been strongly reinforced, attacked the Turkish positions and in brilliant fashion won two lines of trenches, which, according to French officers, posses considerable strategic importance.

Big Artillery Duels.

"In the region of Achi Baba artillery duels have been intense.

"At Avi Burnu a British battalion was forced to retire for some 300 yards before a particularly violent attack, but the position is none the worse for that occurrence. During this attack three enemy aeroplanes flew over our lines directing the Turkish fire."

Turks Claim Success.

Constantinople, Aug. 13.—The War Office to-day made public the following official communication:

"Within three days we have captured eight machine guns and munitions near Avi Burnu (on the Gallipoli Peninsula).

"Our artillery has hit a hostile warship off Avi Burnu.

"Near Sedd-ul-Bahr, on the right wing, we took trenches of a hundred yards by storm."

Turks Caught Unprepared

ATHENS, Aug. 13.—Details of the operations of the allies in the Gallipoli Peninsula, beginning last Saturday night, have been received here. Small transports steamed in the darkness to a position in the middle entrance of the Gulf of Saros. A gigantic attack of the allies on all fronts at daybreak occupied the full attention of the Turks, leaving them no time to prepare for a landing, which was made at a point not yet specified in the reports. Besides they did not know where, on a 50-mile coast, a landing would occur.

The British-French artillery poured a terrific hail of shells on the Turkish trenches, and knowing the range to within a fraction of a yard, the gunners inflicted severe punishment. At times the whole line was obliterated by a billowy curtain of creamy smoke. The Krithia tower, which had withstood a dozen bombardments, came toppling down. For an hour the air was rent with terrific crashes, one blending with another as whistling projectiles sailed overhead towards the enemy's position.

Great Bayonet Charge.

When the shell firing ceased orders for an advance were given. The French and Senagalese holding the left, and the naval division and the Ghurkas the centre and the British forces the right, plunged across the intervening hundred yards, cleared and occupied the first enemy trench. The British right, by a brilliant bayonet charge, captured two lines of trenches, giving the British machine guns an opportunity to enfilade the Turkish trenches.

North of Gaba Tepe the Australians simultaneously charged the trenches at the point of the bayonet.

Huns Wanted Peace Some Months Ago

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Austro-German overtures for a separate peace with Russia were begun at the end of March, according to the Star, which quotes telegrams it says were taken from an Italian green book, said to have been published today.

The first intimation of such peace proposal, according to the Star's article, was contained in a telegram from the Italian Ambassador at Petrograd to the Italian Foreign Office, dated March 29, in which the ambassador said he learned from an unimpeachable source that a serious attempt to make peace had been addressed to the Russian Government.

Twelve days later, the article continues, the Italian Minister at Nish informed his Government that a separate peace between Austria and Russia was possible. The Minister at Sofia, Bulgaria, sent similar news, the Star continues, and the series of communications from which it quotes ends with a telegram from the Italian Ambassador at Berlin, dated April 15, in which the ambassador is quoted as having said:—

"Rumors of a movement for a separate peace are persistently maintained and are constantly gaining ground."

Ottawa Lacks News Of Banking Mercer

OTTAWA, August 13.—Finance Department officials declare that they are without information as to the alleged interference of the Department in a proposed merger of a Montreal and a Toronto bank.

"I have no information on it," Capt' T. C. Boville, Deputy Minister of Finance remarked to a Star representative today. "I have heard of no such interference and this is the first I have heard of the proposed merger." Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, is in Toronto today and it is possible that the matter may have been taken up with him there. Department officials here, however, are unaware whether such a course has been taken. Under the terms of the Bank Act, a bank may not agree to sell the whole of any portion of its assets to another bank until the Minister of Finance, in writing, consents that such an agreement may be entered into between the two banks.

CANADA IS NOW REFINING ITS OWN ZINC AND COPPER

OTTAWA, August 13.—Canada's output of empty shells has been gradually raised until it is now about 25,000 a day. Difficulty has been experienced in obtaining the required amount of explosives, and as no empty shells are being sent to Great Britain the cases are being stored until the output of filling material catches up with case production.

Arrangements have been completed whereby Canada will in future refine the copper and zinc required in the manufacture of munitions. For this purpose refining plants have been established at Trail, B.C., and other points. Formerly these metals, though mined in Canada, had to be shipped across the border to be refined, a very slow and expensive process.

Kitching, of Salvation Army headquarters, writing from St. Petersburg to Daily Chronicle says that while war has caused much mourning in Russia, and its sorrows are more evident there than in any country he has visited, the people are as hopeful and determined as ever and their loyalty to allies, especially to England, unquenchable.

Gov't Sits Tight On Cotton Plans

Speculation in Britain Runs Wild and Big Financial Coups are Contemplated

LONDON, August 13.—That the British Government is about to make a new departure in regard to the cotton question is common knowledge, but the exact lines upon which the new policy will be framed are, for obvious reasons, a carefully-guarded secret.

"It would be worth a fortune to possess inside information on that point," said a leading cotton dealer to a correspondent today. "Speculation as to the Government's course is running wild. One rumor is that the Government contemplates the purchase of a large portion, if not all, of the coming cotton crop, and there are reports that on the assumption that this rumor is well-founded, syndicates have been formed in Liverpool and elsewhere with a view of taking speculative advantage of the situation. In other quarters, skepticism exists as to any such contemplated action by the Government. The fact that cotton prices are normal, considering the conditions through which the trade is passing, is regarded as a clear indication that the Government's secret whatever it may be, is being well kept.

Meanwhile, pending the forthcoming official announcement, it is noteworthy that the agitation which has been conducted by part of the British press in favor of declaring cotton contraband of war, has overshot the mark by exaggeration and exuberance such as had full play at the Queen's Hall meeting yesterday. Responsible opinion here holds that the main argument for putting cotton on the contraband list is that such action would dispose of American legal objections to the policy enumerated in the orders-in-council. Most of the other arguments, as the Manchester Guadian pointedly states, are based on nothing more solid than misapprehension of the facts.

It is expected that when the British Government plans are ripe the solution arrived at will be found to take into full consideration the claims and interests of neutrals. That was the consummation it was desired to reach by the, orders-in-council. In substance, the orders-in-council were believed by the British authoritees to be in line with acknowledged belligerent rights: in form ,their legality has been questioned by America. The new plan of the British Government is designed to meet the letter as well as the spirit of the laws that guarantee the right of neutrals to pursue their legitimte trade.

Deseronto News

The Brighton baseball team played Deseronto in the Driving Park on Tuesday afternoon. The game resulted in Brighton being more than victorius. The visiting team was entertained by the local team. A large crowd was on the grounds.

Redfern Vanalstine was getting some pears off a tree in his orchard on Thomas street, when he missed his footing falling to the ground, which resulted in the breaking of his leg and also a deep gash inhis forehead.

Tribute to Russians On Masterly Retreat

Army Falling Back from Warsaw Has Time to Take New Positions

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Reviewing the situation in Russia the military correspondent of the Times first pays an enthusiastic tribute to the masterly retreat of the Russian armies. It says the stand made by the wings protecting the army falling back from Warsaw was magnificent and undoubtedly was entirely successful, as the Warsaw army now is assured of ample time to fall back to a prepared position.

The decisive front now, according to the correspondent, is admittedly in the far north where no real success is possible for the Germans until the fall of Riga and Kovno enables them seriously to threaten the retreat of the Russian central and northern groups of armies to the northwest.

"Even Kovno is only a stepping stone for the Germans," he says. "The real question is as to the strength of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, whose presence indicates he is at the head of a formidable group of armies and in charge of the decisive operation of the eastern campaign. If von Hindenburg can be successfully opposed there will be no catastrophies for the Russian armies.

"It is premature to discuss what the Germans will do in other theatres after the conclusion of the campaign in Russia. It is probable they do not know themselves, and their plans must depend on the character and extent of their success or failure."
